

MAN-O-WAR THE WORLDS GREATEST RACE HORSE

Was an Easy Winner Over Ross' Sir Barton at Windsor, Ont.—
A World-wide Interest in the $75,000 Match — Yankee
Horsemen Backed Man-of-War Heavily in the Betting—
An Exciting Sporting Event.

(New York Herald)
Windsor, Ont., Oct. 12—"Man o' War, the greatest racehorse in the world."

That was the line written into the annals of the turf here today when the lion hearted three-year-old ran away from the mighty Sir Barton and crossed the finish line in a canter seven lengths in front.

It wasn't much of a contest in that Man o' War made Commander Ross's horse look like a selling plate. But the twenty-odd thousand onlookers had come out to crown a champion and they did it in regal fashion.

There was world wide interest in the $75,000 match race at the Kenilworth track. Breeders and sportsmen had said that there never had been and probably never would be another horse like Man o' War. But Sir Barton had his big following and today they met and raced for the biggest purse in American history and before one of the most enthusiastic crowds that ever watched a barrier sprung.

The big chestnut son of Fair Play and Mahubah was never fully extended, and although eased up to almost a walk all through the final furlong, he covered the one mile and a quarter route in 1:03. This time clipped 6 2-5 seconds from the track mark and 1

3-5 seconds from the Canadian record, made by Captain Swanson at Hamilton in 1912.

But even though it did smash these marks it does not tell truly Man o' War's wonderful feat. The track over which the race was run was at least three seconds slower than Belmont Park and Saratoga, and it was the opinion of all expert horsemen, including the owner and trainer of the vanquished Sir Barton, that it was the equal of the questionable world's record of 2.00 made on Whisk Broom at Belmont Park in 1913.

With his victory went the undisputed championship of America and Canada for Sir Barton was in a class by himself among the handicap horses in both countries. It also made him the largest money winner the American turf has ever known. It brought his total winnings up to the huge total of $244,465 and a $5,000 gold cup. This beat Domino's winnings, which formerly headed the list, by more than $50,000, for the late James R. Keene's great colt, won during his racing career $193,550.

The victory also placed him fourth among the largest money winning thoroughbreds in the world behind three immortal English horses, singlass, Donovan and Rocksand.

Whether or not he will go on next season and lead the world is a matter of conjecture. Samuel D. Riddle, his owner, said today that he has not decided what he will do with the colt next year. Louis Feustel, the young trainer who bought, developed and trained him, said that he probably would compete in a few weight for age races in 1921.

21,000 Pay $5 Admission

More than 21,000 persons, each of whom paid $5 admission saw the contest and never in the history of racing in America or Canada did a victor receive such an ovation. The enthusiasm of the crowd was much greater than that ever displayed by an American crowd on an American track when Man o' War scored his other nineteen victories. The throng yelled and cheered as no similar gathering has done in recent years. It wasn't a wild cheer while the champion came prancing down the homestretch and when he returned to the scale such as that accorded him in America. It was a continuous round of hurrahs from the time he took the lead about seventy yards after the start until he had passed out of view on his way back to his stable.

It was an international match because Man o' War's owner is an American from Philadelphia, while Sir Barton's owner is a popular Canadian from Montreal. But despite this international rivalry among the citizens of the two countries, every one present and they were about equally divided in their sentiments, cheered him to the echo. They forgot their wagers and sentiments and paid homage to one of the greatest thoroughbreds this or any other country has ever known.

After the contest thousands of excited men and women swarmed on the track and gave cheer after cheer to the equine wonder his owner, trainer and Clarence Kummer, the jockey who rode him, and when Mr. Riddle was presented with the $5,000 cup emblematic of the championship every man, woman and child present gave vent to their feelings with a round of cheers that could be heard across the river in Detroit.

Man o' War at 1 to 20.

While the crowd was about equally divided between Canadians and Americans the Yankees did twenty times as much betting. They backed up their faith and hopes with wagers and made Man o' War a 1 to 20 shot. They placed $132,000 in the mutual machines on their favorite while Sir Barton's backers wagered only $14,000. This made the machines pay $2.10 on every $2 Man o' War ticket.

AROUND THE TOWN

famous was at the Court House. The impersonation was carried out by an employe of one of the leading hotels who held the office of "wine clerk," since become obsolete. He was dressed carefully at the hotel in woman's garb borrowed for the occasion and heavily veiled was escorted to the poll. The lady in whose name he voted was out of the city and there was little chance of her making objection. The voting was carried out successfully. History does not state whether or not the returning officer was blind and deaf.

The passing of the little wooden building which for years protected the weigh-scales at Phoenix Square, recalls the fact that for a long while the attendant of the scales had no protection from the weather. Samuel Cook, who has been a visitor from the Canadian West for several months, was in charge at that time. The City Council thought it was doing something particularly generous when it decided to erect the little building. It was given a coat of yellow paint. Soon afterward some fiend in human form daubed the building with tar secured at a convenient street-making operation. Not only was the shack daubed but the police force was insulted, the words "Rotten Cops" being daubed on. This was a gentle hint that the unknown artist did not have a very exalted idea of the personnel of the police force of the day. The police of that day have long since left the force. George R. Rideout, who recently resigned as chief at Moncton, is the only one who remained at police work.

The troubles in Ireland are lineal successors of those which more than a century ago resulted in the formation of the organization known as the United Irishmen, and in the rebellion of 1798, the only result of which was the abolition of Home Rule, as it was represented by the Irish parliament. One noted leader in that ill-starred movement was Lord Edward FitzGerald. In Fredericton's early days he was stationed here as an officer in a British regiment of infantry. Records show that he frequently was entertained at the Government House of the day, which was not the structure now standing on the Woodstock road.

Recently a document of great historical value came to the writer of this column. It was a record of restaurant prices in the period when a "hot dinner" could be obtained for the magnificent sum of twenty cents. The price list, which is in the form of a dodger, (Continued on page 4)
