AN ELABORATE IC-ING MADE SIMPLE

Even really good cooks have confessed to me their many failures in assistance and the nerves all on edge making White Mountain icing, the why not try Ferrozone?—it will surely kind you have to boil sugar and water until it strings and drop over it a beated white of egg. But because, like the little girl with the little curl stomach. when it is good it is so extremely delicious, I used to attempt it over and over, with the successes and failures being about fifty-fifty. Then I heard of a sure-fire, hundred per cent. perfect method, and I pass it on that other families, like ours, may level in the luscious, creamy frosting which will transform a bought sponge cake into a delectable

Put a scant cup of sugar, four table spoons of water and the white of one egg in a double boiler. Let it cook for about eight minutes, beating it all the time, and add a few drops of vanilla.

AUTUMN STYLES.

Who started the theory that the ong tight sleeve was a natural complementary of the high collar? You have heard it everywhere, and more than one commentator on the autumn fashions has spoken of the long tight leeve as a foregone conclusion since t was apparent that French women ere going to wear high, swathing ollars on occasions.

But what seems to have happened this. While, especially here in Amrica, women are holding out against he high collar, which they insist is itno the picture. Without a doubt we shall soon get to the point where w vill accept an occasional high collar in our wardrobes, not because we find it becoming or because we are convinced that it is not uncomfortable but because it looks right.

While the high collar is in the grad ual ascendency the short sleeve has not lost caste for daytime wear quite so automatically as we thought i would. In fact, the high collared frock with extremely short sleeves has sco ed a great success. It has the san tion of French approved by Martia Armand and a score of other dress makers, and in the recent openings here and in France the high collar with short sleeve was again apparent

You may be sure that when talk of high collars is in the air there will always re revived that old, old question as to the comparative desirability of clothes that are first of all become ing and those that are first of all smart. The low collar is more becoming to nine women out of ten than is the high collar, but there is little question that the high collar posses ses adantages of smartness for street and daytime frocks. And there really are times when it avails a woman more to look smart and decidedly in the picture than to be dressed becomingly but with less style.

There really is nothing that has aused so much concern to the welldressed woman here and in Paris dur ing the recent long reign of the low collar as the problem of coering the the swathing of tulle, silk scarts and wol scarfs and the short-lived ostrich collarette-all these have been mere ly a protest of smart women against showing the bare back of the neck in Opp. Soldiers' Barracks and Next Door to Bank of N. S. Building,
