OF INTEREST TO WOMEN

STRIPES IN DECORATION

Just as the short, plump woman must avoid horizontal stripes and her slender sister eschew vertical ones, so must the walls of the narrow, high ceilinged room be forbidden striped paper and its windows vertical striped curtains. But the low ceilinged, low windowed room can reveal in paper with stripes and with curtains that are stripe line from casing rods to sills.

A valance of striped material, the lines running horizontally, will apparently cut down the height and broaden a too high window, and stripes applied to the hem of a plain color or rigidly figured curtain will have the same effect.

Bold stripes are trying in any but the most bizarre decorative schemes. Shadowy, indistinct stripes, self-colored, perhaps, are far more pleasing for every day use. In general striped materials should be avoided when much cutting and piecing must be done, for joining stripes at seams almost always leaves much to be desired.

But stripes can be used for the loose cushions of a chair whose framework is covered with plain material. A low backed chair with arms almost as high as its back is preserved from a squat appearance if the back cushion is perpendicularly striped.

Striped cushions with willow furniture are generally mistakes. The willow work has too many lines of its own.

Stripes of various widths, the wider stripes patterned on dainty designs, are delightful for upholstery use on chairs of French origin when the wood work is not at all heavy and perhaps delicately carved.

that Canadians must love every section of their vast inheritance and not only the one small portion where they had been born and bred. He was a son of the Province of Quebec; in every drop of his blood he was a descendant of the hardy pioneers who settled New France and he was proud of his race and origin, but he was proud above all of being a Canadian, and loyalty knew no sectional division. He longed for the day when the spirit of patriotism would endear to all Canadians every foot of soil and until that day the Canadian people could not hope to achieve real Canadian nationality.

Liberalism, he said, was pledged to secure this end, for the party was rocked in the cradle of liberty, the principles of which were eternal and, although they might be borne down at times they were strongly imbued with the spirit of truth and justice, and ultimately truth and justice would prevail.

Mr. Lapointe sat down amidst such an outburst of cheering as was only equalled by that which had greeted
