OF INTEREST TO WOMEN

SOFT GRAYS AND BROWNS TO PREDOMINATE IN FALL

All the lovely demure shades from pearl grey to deepest African brown are to make their appearance along the Bois in early autumn, predicts Harper's Bazar for August, and in proof, shows some of the latest creations of the famous French houses.

From Chanel comes the smartest of tailless to accompany you into the crisp Autumn air. It is of grey wool long coated, squirrel collared, and with two fascinating panels of grey embroidery down the front to give it an air of festivity.

From Royant comes a cape of deep brown velvet to wear over your finest dinner gown. Soft loutre bands it four times around the bottom and forms an upstanding collar to frame the face.

Poiret also chooses dark brown and loutre,—this time to make a tailleur of velours de laine which he belts very narrowly with the fabric and collars cuffs and edges the other long coat with the fur.

From Royant comes another irresistible cape. Of softest lovely grey it has shawl-like sleeves with circular bands of mole, a deep edging of mole around the bottom and a delightful yoke of the same fur which gives it a charm all its own.

But the prize creation is that which comes from Madeleine et Madeleine,—a most intriguing rain-coat, which defies rain and wind as well as maintaining an air of chic which any luxurious perishable wrap might envy. Of grey crepe de Chine, it is rubberized on the underside and enchantingly cross-stitched in dark blue.

DECORATIVE PILLOWS.

Large pillows are the most fashionable now, therefore, better to get two large ones than several small ones. The backs may be made of plain material which matches the rest of the room, or of black. Black always works up effectively on pillows. A satin or satine would be preferable to another material.

For the fronts buy ordinary chintz or cretonne might be used, if you prefer.

Choose the brightest colors you can get, but be careful still to preserve harmony.

Before you sew the front to the back veil the chintz with a silk tulle, silk voile or chiffon. This should be the color of the predominating color used in the chintz or cretonne, or it should be the same color in a darker shade. In some cases you would do well to have this veiling material of black.

NICE SUGAR COOKIES.

One cup of sugar, ½ cup butter, 3 eggs, whites and yolks beaten separately, 1 tablespoonful of milk, 1 teaspoonful of baking powder sifted into flour sufficient to make a dough to be rolled out.

Cream butter and sugar; beat in the whipped eggs; add the flour, a little at a time, stirring it in until dough is stiff enough to roll. Flour your hands, make a ball of the dough and lay it on the molding board. Roll out in a sheet about ¼ of an inch thick. Cut into cookies, sift granulated sugar over each and bake a delicious brown in a quick oven.

KNITTERS GET A NEW HUNCH

Arrived—from nowhere in particular—the urge to knit a rose colored sweater of thin yarn.

Knitting has its seasons as do children's games. The same urge which causes every boy in the land to produce tops and marbles, or to fly kites at a given season each year changes the style of fabric on the knitting needles which keep time to the rail clicks on subway, elevated and suburban trains.

In the winter season it is mufflers, ties, scarfs, and heavy yarn things that keep the knitters from paying any attention to young men trying to flirt. With early spring there is a shift to lace, or tatting, or silk things knitable. Within the past week there has grown on innumerable "largest size" wooden knitting needles the start of what will be when it materializes on human forms divine a sea of rose colored sweaters.

If you have doubts take a look—probably there are one to five manufactured in the very car you are on.

THE PROOF.

He—I don't think I'd like to marry any girl unless I knew she was self-sacrificing.
She—But wouldn't marrying you prove that she was?

P. J. Halliwell of Truro is a guest at the Barekr House.

STONES IN NEVADA ARE SPOONERS

(New York Sun.)

Two amateur hunters who have just returned to this city from the West have a story which they claim makes all previous attempts of the world's most famous "fish story" tellers back down, retract, and otherwise surrender the palm to them. In this case, however, the relaters seem to have natural history on their side.

They say that they saw stones in Nevada which had a natural affinity for each other and refused to be separated. Descriptions of such stones have often come from Nevada, but the pair claim that they never did believe it possible until they saw the phenomenon with "their own eyes."

According to their story these stones have such an aversion to being placed at a little distance from each other that they put to shame such close workers as the couples on the park benches and on the excursion boats out of New York. One seldom sees two people sitting very far apart in the rowboats on the Harlem Mere in Central Park at night but these rocks, it seems, would make such couples look as though not on speaking terms.

The freak stones are known in Nevada as "sociable stones." The hunters were introduced to them one day when they tried to lay a paper on the ground to use as a tablecloth. They put one of the rocks on each corner of the sheet, and to their surprise the stones immediately began to move toward a common centre.

"I thought nothing of it when I saw the stones all in the middle," said one "as I didn't see them move. I put them back at the corners, and as I did they began rolling in toward the centre again. I thought the centre must be too low, so I reached for a big one of the 'sociables' and put that under the middle of our 'tablecloth.'"

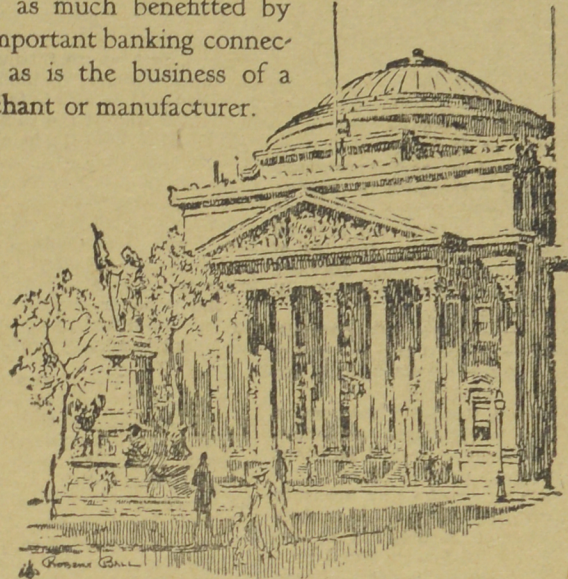

"Yes," said the other, taking up the story, "and if he ever scares me like that again I'm through travelling with him for life I thought it was a thunderbolt's crash when those rocks all smacked together."

Sometimes an easygoing person is hard to get rid of.
