HOW TO DO
FIVE THINGS
AT ONE TIME

(By Tameo Kajiyama, the wonderful Japanese, who can read, write, calculate, talk and listen simultaneously. From the London Daily Mail, by Cross-Atlantic Newspaper Service.)

London, Sept. 13—People ask me if it is not harmful to the brain to tax it with several actions at the same time.

I do not think it is; on the contrary, I believe it to be exceedingly beneficial, by increasing the power of concentration to learn to do more than one thing at a time.

Will-power is really the foundation of the mind. Without it civilization and human progress are unthinkable. And it is the will-power of man which distinguishes him from animals and makes him the master of all things that exist on this earth.

To do a certain thing we must concentrate our attention upon that certain thing, as, for instance, reading a newspaper.

To do two things at the same time we must concentrate our attention upon two things simultaneously; and to do three things, concentrate upon three things at the same time, and so on. But since, in order to concentrate our attention, we must rely upon will-power, the question of whether or not we can do more than one thing at a time depends upon the strength and the nature of the will-power we possess.

It is believed by many people that we can do only one thing at a time because we can direct only one attention at a time.

But I have proved that this is a mistaken idea. In examining carefully the working of the will in its relation to the concentration of attention, I have discovered that in an ordinary action of the mind, such as reading a newspaper, we use only about one-fifth of the power of attention we possess, leaving the remaining four-fifths diffused.

And it is this diffused part of the attention which makes us conscious of things around us, although we are not intentionally directing our thoughts upon them. So the stronger the diffused part of attention the greater is the possibility of distraction.

We must learn to concentrate as much of our attention as possible in order to make the diffused part less. The stronger the concentration the weaker the power of distraction.

Now, doing two things at the same time means to concentrate two-fifths of the attention upon two different subjects simultaneously. To do this it would naturally require twice as much mental effort and therefore twice as much will-power.

Since the will-power increases in proportion to the degree of its application one will find some difficulty in the beginning, but as one applies one's will-power it will grow stronger and eventually, if properly trained, it will be possible for one to concentrate attention upon two, three, or even four things simultaneously. By the will-power so trained and strengthened one will be able to direct and concentrate attention upon more than two things at the same time, thus enabling one to concentrate a greater part of their attention upon one subject, which will be many times stronger than if one is able to direct only one-fifth of attention at a time.

Concentration is possible without will-power. The secret of concentration is, therefore, the training, educating, and increasing of that power. To increase it, it must be used, exercised, and developed. There must be constant endeavor to improve upon one's "best."

Best Liniment Made

Mr. A. R. LAUNDRY, EDMONTON, writes: "I fell from a building and received what the doctor called a very bad sprained ankle, and told me I must not walk on it for three weeks. I got MINARD'S LINIMENT and in six days I was out to work again. I think it the best Liniment made."

Minard's Liniment always gives satisfaction. For any ache or pain. It gives instant relief.

HUNS TOLD TO IMBIBE
LESS BEER

(Special to the Daily Mail. Copyright.)

Berlin, Sept. 11—Germany must drink less beer is the dictum of eminent German scientists who investigated the results of the decreased consumption of alcohol in war time. Researches show that the mental and bodily health, and the economic efficiency of the people increased in war time as a result of the decrease in beer drinking but the use of morphine and cocaine has increased.

Women have an increased longing for drinks since the war, however, declare Government Scientists Bondefer and Partisch who are urging restricted production of alcohol drinks, shorter hours for the beer gardens, higher prices for alcoholic drinks and lower prices for non-alcoholic beverages.

Unfortunately, one never appreciates the value of economy until he gets within three jumps of the poor house.

Historical note: And when old man Price finally reached the peak he looked about and said, "Here will I abide."
