WONDERFUL WAYS AND WILES OF WOMEN

(Chicago News.)

"Yes, I take a two months' vacation every six months," asserted the woman in the jade fringed sweater. "My system requires it. My doctor says my storage battery runs down every half-year and nothing but perfect rest will recharge it!"

"Friend Husband's check book helps some on the recharging, doesn't it?" yawned the pretty bachelor girl who already regretted her choice of summer resorts. But her comment was lost in a playful inquiry from one of the young married women who hung on the words of the woman in the fringed sweater.

"What is your doctor's name, Mrs. Doltle? Perhaps he will prescribe the same treatment for some of the rest of us poor housewives! How does your little scheme work?"

"Well," smiled the woman in the jade sweater, complacently folding her fat hands over the place here her waistline ought to be, "last winter I was simply crazy to go to Arizona. I had heard about the wonderful horse-back riding and the pure air—and the marvelous atmosphere which makes Harold Bell Wright write and I decided that was the place for me. I suddenly came down with nervous prostration!"

The bachelor girl registered disgust, but the young married woman persisted: "What are the symptoms, and how do you get that way?"

"You just cry all the time—cry at breakfast because your vitality is so low in the mornings, cry at dinner because you have had such an exhausting day, and cry when you go to bed because you cannot sleep! That's what I did!"

"It's a wonder your husband didn't send you to spend a week on each of the Thousand Islands!" exclaimed the bachelor girl. But the speaker ignored the interruption.

"I had the doctor posted on the exact spot guaranteed to produce a cure. Ah! Those glorious nights and days in the desert, far from the maddening crowd, with only a few select cowboys to teach us to ride! The wonderful starlit night! I shall never forget them!"

"Did you recover entirely?" timidly asked the young married woman.

"I may have another attack next fall," sighed the woman in the jade sweater. Then turning to the pretty bachelor girl she said kindly:

"I suppose you business girls never feel the strain of overwork that we housewives do—the work that is never done!"

"Never done is right!" murmured the bachelor girl under her breath, but aloud she replied sweetly: "Oh, no! We are part of the office machine wound up for fifty weeks out of the year and guaranteed to run down only for two weeks discreetly designated in advance! But two weeks of this will be quite enough for me!" she added, truthfully. "Already I can feel the wheels in my head getting rusty. Think I'll borrow the hotel typewriter and compose a book for men only, entitled 'The Way and Wiles of Wives!' Au revoir, ladies!"

"Little cat!" snapped the woman in the jade sweater gazing enviously after the slender figure of the bachelor girl. "To hear her talk one would think she knew all about men—and she's never been able to corral one. I'll wager she's gone in to flirt with the hotel clerk now!"

BABY WAS NOT SURE

Bobby's mother rejoices in the shining possession of a new library table with a Persian runner paying an elegant road down its centre. Upon returning home from a Wednesday matinee she was horrified to discover on the right hand mahogany sidewalk the groping impressions of an embryo artist reduced to physical expression with the aid of a sharp-pointed pin, and on the left hand sidewalk a confused assortment of halting and maimed letters, such as her six-year-old son was accustomed to practise daily on large sheets of paper.

Her voice was severe as she summoned Bobby to her side, and, placing an accusing forefinger on the lettered sidewalk, demanded: "Bobby, what is this?"

Solemnly he regarded the spot upon which her finger rested, squinted his eyes, wrinkled his forehead thoughtfully and at last remarked diplomatically: "I think it's an R, mother."

LOVE IS COSTLY; CUPID IS A PROFITEER

(New York Sun)

The Fairest Lady had wanted one, so Archibald McGee hied him to a downtown bookshop to buy for her a dream book. Two such volumes were produced by the willing clerk, one paper backed and selling for fifteen cents, the other more ambitiously brought out with cloth covers and costing one dollar and a half. Now the Fairest Lady had mentioned no particular dream book, and Archibald McGee clutched his pocket book and deliberated. To buy the first would be painless; to buy the better one would mean three lunchless days. Love is a costly thing.

Archibald opened the paper volume. Let's see, hadn't the F. L. said something of having dreamed of a house several times? She had; and this is the interpretation the fifteen cent book placed on the dream; "If your sweetheart is a blonde he is untrue and is not to be trusted. You must break off your friendship with him."

Archibald whose hair is golden and whose eyes are blue turned to the cloth bound book. To the "H's" he turned the pages rapidly. Under "House" he came to this:

"To dream of a house means that your sweetheart is good tempered and faithful and will make you very happy."

For three days thereafter Archibald McGee ate no luncheon.
