KANSAS GIRL DIGS
COAL IN FATHERS MINE

(New York Sun)

Coal strikes may come and coal strikes may go but they don't bother Ricka Ott 21 years old, who industriously mines coal day after day in a little "wagon mine" on her father's farm in the hills of Mount Oliver, Pa., near Pittsburg, says the Wichita, Kan. Beacon.

For Miss Ricka is her own boss—miner, operator, manager and distributor. In fact she is a general "Jack of all trades."

But above all, she is a coal miner, and proudly admits it. Day after day she merrily wheels her "black diamonds" from the little hillside mine, while she hums the latest popular airs. Attired in "jumpers," her face besmirched with the grime of the mine, she may be found any day but Sunday with "Karlo"—that's her wheelbarrow—somewhere about the mine.

Three years ago, when all the mines of western Pennsylvania were working up to their capacity of production in an effort to keep a never ending stream of coal flowing to the mills where weapons and munitions were being turned out, Ricka, with a desire to do something toward winning the war, suggested to her father, Gregory Ott, who worked in a steel mill, that they open a mine. He was opposed to the idea of giving up his job for the uncertainty of the small coal mine.

She Turns Miner

Winter conditions invariably balked operations at the small mines because roads invariably became impassable, he told Ricka.

"I'll mine the coal and sell it," she told her father. And he laughed. The idea of a girl mining coal and driving a truck! He told her the idea was preposterous. But to Ricka it wasn't. She "harped" on the subject until her father agreed to start the mine for her.

And she has proved more than a match for other miners of the country. She says she has no cares or worries except one—her fight with the Mount Oliver Borough Council.

Soon after Ricka had her mine fairly under way and had coal orders stacked up high the only road leading to her mine became almost impassable just as her father said it would. She

M'ADOO IS NO
PUSSYFOOTER

New York, Sept. 11.—If Gov. Cox and his Tammany supporters have an idea they can wink at the Eighteenth Amendment and get away with it they have forgotten to reckon on William G. McAdoo, formerly Secretary of the Treasury and near-nominee for the Democratic Presidential nomination.

Mr. McAdoo took the trouble to state emphatically yesterday that he opposes anything and everything which looks like an attempt to break down prohibition, and open the way for the sale of beer and light wines. Gov. Cox has been silent on the prohibition issue and that silence is being interpreted generally by the country as a tacit acknowledgment that he is a wet candidate. Before starting out on the stump yesterday for the Democratic ticket, Mr. McAdoo made known that he does not stand for any such pussy-footing campaign methods.

His statement was given, Mr. McAdoo said, in "response to a question as to his position on the prohibition amendment."

took a day off and went before the Borough Council and presented her case. The Borough fathers promised to do something, but they didn't do it. And Ricka still has a fight on her hands. She still has the almost impassable road, though she's making the best of it, but she insists the road is going to be fixed—and by the borough too.

No Envy for Store Girls

"To work out of doors, to be free and independent—that is the happiest part of my life," says Ricka. "I do not envy the girls who work in offices or stores, cooped up all day long and wearing those tight fitting dresses. I love the sun and the fresh air, the big outdoors and the freedom. Many persons, no doubt think I am strange to work so hard, but I am my own boss and business is good, and, better than all, I am happy. I have worked in a store, but never again."

Some get rich slowly and wear fine linen, and some get rich quick and wear stripes.

The agitator apparently has a theory that the world's work can be done with the tongue.

STATEN ISLAND
VAMPIRE NOT AT ALL DANGEROUS

New York Sun

Speaking of desmodontoids—You don't know what they are? Simple. A desmodontoid is—a

But never mind. Any unabridged dictionary has the word, and Grant City Staten Island, has a desmodontoid. She is a pretty little desmo, with black hair and eyes and a smile that melts the heart. That's why students of biology say desmos are dangerous. "See that little girl out there?" said the Staten Islander pointing through the window of the St. George train as it came to a stop at Grant City. "She's a vamp, that little girl, a regular vamp. She vamps every train that comes along and she always get away with something."

"Vamps the trains?" asked the New Yorker who sat next to the window and suddenly found himself under the eyes and smile of the little girl.

Islander mournfully. "You're picked. You're gone. I know 'em. I've seen her work before."

"Remember," said the New Yorker returning the smile of the little girl. "I'm always in a hurry and have a hard heart."

"That does no good with that little desmodontoid. She's got a future before her that little girl."

"Desmofon—the New Yorker stuttered

"Desmodontoid. That's a vamp. Usually they're not dangerous when they are small but this one is."

"That word must belong to the Staten Island language," said the New Yorker. "I don't believe there is such a thing. Hello, little girl; how are you feeling today?"

The little girl toed the dirt at her feet and shook the locks of her black hair.

"Are you looking for something?" asked the New Yorker, as he noticed the smile had gone from her face and she looked as though she was on the verge of tears.

There was no answer.

"Do you want something little girl?" he asked.

"No, nuffin," she said, her face brightening with a smile that shed its full light on the New Yorker. "Nuffin" only some candy."

"You win," said the New Yorker to the Staten Islander, as he tossed a dime out the window. Then, as the train rolled away: "You sure do win. Desmodontoid is a good name for 'em."
