WOULD ERECT MONUMENT TO LATE COL. MACKENZIE

Former Chaplain of the Fighting 26th Tells of the Splendid Record Made by U. N. B. Graduate Who Gave Up His Life in the War—Made the Supreme Sacrifice While Leading His Men in Action.

(St John Telegraph.)

One of the most interesting and inspiring addresses which had been given for some time before the members of the Canadian Club was delivered yesterday at noon at a luncheon in Bond's restaurant by Rev. Major R. C. MacGillivray M. C., of Glace Bay, N. S., formerly chaplain of the 26th Battalion.

A. M. Belding president and a very large gathering was present, including several former officers of the battalion with whom the padre is deservedly popular.

Father MacGillivray went overseas with a Nova Scotia unit and later was transferred to the 26th Battalion, remaining with that unit for two years. He was with the unit and over the top with the boys in several of their fiercest engagements and acquitted himself in a manner well deserving of the title "The Fighting Padre," eventually winning for himself promotion and the Military Cross for his part in the capture of some German prisoners and artillery in the battle of Amiens.

In his address yesterday Father MacGillivray chose as his subject the work of the 26th Battalion in the capture of Drocourt-Queant switch, one of the almost impregnable portions of the famous Hindenburg line. He said that he realized that he only had a short time to speak and apologized for not preparing his subject but, as the notice was so short, he did not have an opportunity to do so. Under these circumstances he would therefore speak on what he considered the most important phase of operations in the closing days of the war.

A glowing tribute to the courage and bravery of the officers and men of the battalion was paid by the speaker, who referred at considerable length to the personal daring, able leadership and fearless courage displayed by its commander, Lieut-Col. A. E. G. Mackenzie, D. S. O., who gave his life in that engagement. He described him as a thorough soldier and sincere friend; a strict disciplinarian but a genuine, big-hearted comrade to all his brothers in arms, regardless of rank, and said that the people of New Brunswick should, at the earliest opportunity erect a monument to his memory. The padre was within a few feet of Colonel Mackenzie when he fell. He described him going forward and bursting shells and a rain of machine gun bullets, calmly and fearlessly, compass in hand, coolly keeping his bearings and inspiring his men with confidence and encouragement. He said that was how he fell. In a kneeling position with his compass in his hand, facing the enemy and sizing up the situation, he went to his death. One of the men went to him and touching him upon the shoulder was about to tell him when he realized that he was dead. If ever a man deserved the Victoria Cross for bravery in the field and the continued esteem and good will of the people at home that man, said the speaker, was Colonel Mackenzie.

The padre went on and described in graphic and picturesque language thrilling scenes in action, the various hardships encountered, the sacrifices endured and cheerful spirit in which all hands carried on until the day was won and the Hindenburg line was smashed.

"While we felt that we had won a great victory," he said, "and it was natural that there should be rejoicing we were all saddened by the death of the colonel and other good fellows of whom so many gave their lives in that engagement. Our ranks were sadly thinned and from a good sized battalion we came out a mere handful."

The padre did not refer to any good work done by himself, although fellow officers about the table were fully aware that he could tell much which his sense of modesty forbade. He paid a general tribute to the battalion as a whole and said that it filled him with pride to have been attached to a unit with such an enviable record.

During the course of his address he narrated several amusing and humorous happenings from his own experience and that of brother officers which added much pleasure and furnished considerable laughter for his audience.

The chairman tendered the thanks of the gathering which were further evidenced in hearty rounds of applause.
