LITTLE DANGER OF SHORTAGE IN WORLD WHEAT SUPPLY

Cannot Happen if the Nations of the World Stop Destroying One Another's Assets by War—The Undeveloped Resources in North and South Temperate Zones of the World, Which are Adapted for Wheat Production.

(By The Rt. Hon. Lord Ernle, M.V.O.)

(Note: Lord Ernle, formerly Rowland E. Prothero, is one of the foremost British authorities on agriculture and food production. As President of the Board of Agriculture, 1916-19, he worked wonders in putting large additional areas of English soil under wheat.)

(Special to the Daily Mail. Copyright)

London, Aug. 21.—In 1898 an eminent man of science, Sir William Crookes, foretold an early shortage in the world's supply of wheat. I think that he made a mistake, and principally because he reckoned without considering the aid of science. Even under existing conditions and with our present knowledge, I do not believe that there is any real prospect of the prophecy approaching fulfilment, so long as we abstain from destroying one another's assets by war. In the temperate zones of the world, there are still undeveloped resources which will allow a manifold increase in the population, securely based on a manifold increase in the production of breadstuffs and other food.

America and Canada, South Africa, Argentina, and Uruguay, still have vast spaces usable, but unused. A great extent of the huge wheat belt of Siberia remains undeveloped. Under a settled government, Mesopotamia is capable of immense expansion in grain production. The application of more intensive methods of agriculture to almost all the regions already cultivated might very largely increase their output, if the world is prepared to pay the price. Meanwhile science perpetually creates new agricultural resources. New mechanical inventions may lighten labor. New power for driving machinery may be brought to the door of the farmer. Nitrogenous fertilizers may be extracted from the air. New cold-resisting quick growing plants may push the farm line north. New drought resisting plants may conquer the arid regions. Plants of higher yield and immune from disease may swell our harvests. In every direction fresh advances of science promise to postpone the verification of the forecast almost indefinitely.

It is true that we are threatened with something like shortage in 1920-21 and in the years immediately following. But the explanation lies, not in the inevitable operation of economic causes, but in the accidental omic causes, but in the accidental orgy of destruction in which the world has recently indulged and is still indulging. I spoke in a previous article of the world's exportable surplus, the pool from which nations draw who cannot feed themselves. The effect of the war has been to increase the demands on the pool and probably to decrease the contributions by which it is fed.

The Case of France

Until her northern areas are completely restored to cultivation, France can hardly return to feeding herself. With their impaired fertility, Italy and Germany will need larger imports. So, also, in all probability will Austria, which used to draw her supplies from Hungary. At the same time Russia and Roumania, which formerly contributed largely to the pool, will be forced to reduce their contributions, if not to cease them altogether. Thus the demands will certainly increase, while the pool itself threatens to decrease. On these facts, shortages appear inevitable, though there are other factors to be considered which may avert real scarcity from this country.

The United States is unlikely to contribute to the pool more than an infinitesimal fraction of her exports during the war. Too much importance must not be attributed to this fact. For some years past she had been dropping into the background as a wheat exporter. She is, therefore, only reverting to peace conditions. During the last two years of the war, her supplies became exceptionally important. Cut off from India and Australia and with Argentine difficult of access, we were forced to rely for breadstuffs on Canada and the United States. The wheat history of the latter country is interesting. But there are still unknown factors to be considered.

Supplies from Canada

Apart from the favorable or unfavorable character of the harvest, there is, in the first place, the exportable surplus from Canada. We may hope for a large increase in pre-war quantities, exports of food from a country, in which abundant supplies may be useful in maintaining internal peace. But there are, in the second place, other countries where it is not too late to increase wheat production within the cereal year—such as Argentina, Australia, Egypt, and Mesopotamia.

It is, in the main, a question of price but it may also in parts of the Empire become a question of Government encouragement. Time is passing. It must not, however, be forgotten that, in a country like Argentina, the choice to some extent lies between wheat and meat. If Argentina produces grain instead of alfalfa, she cannot carry so large a head of cattle. This brings us to the question of our meat supplies.

BEAT HIM AT SAYING GRACE

(New York Sun)

To eight-year-old Isabel ever since she has been able to lisp has fallen the honor in her family of saying the blessing at meals. Consequently she was indignant the other night when at supper her father transferred this privilege to a clergyman who was a dinner guest.

Isabel had already clasped her hands and was bowing her head preparatory to starting the prayer when her father took the fatal step:

"Mr. Funderkin," he said, "will you say the blessing?"

Isabel shot a baleful look at the guest, but a warning expression of her mother's face silenced the protest. Apparently submitting, Isabel bowed her head and her lips moved swiftly as Mr. Funderkin murmured the blessing.
