"GOOD EQUIPMENT MAKES A GOOD FARMER BETTER"

J. Clark & Son, Ltd.
Auto DepartmentOVER DEMAND AND NOT ACTUAL SHORTAGE CAUSE OF HIGH POTATO
PRICES; CONDITIONS IN CARLETON

Boston, Nov. 23—Over-demand stimulated by fear of a possible shortage rather than an actual shortage in this market, is apparently the reason for the rapid rise of potato prices, Eugene C. Hultman, chairman of the special state commission on the necessities of life, reported today. Mr. Hultman said that receipts from Canadian sources this November are 20 times as great as in the same period last year.

He declared that the refusal of the consumer to pay the high prices demanded, coupled with the additional foreign supply, had already lowered prices about 10 per cent.

"Those who are gambling on an anticipated shortage of potatoes next spring may have a rude awakening coming to them if they sit idly by while foreign potatoes are sold in this market at very profitable prices," Mr. Hultman said.

Situation at Hartland.

Hartland, Nov. 23—The market for potatoes, which has been attracting the attention of the public of Canada and the United States for almost three months, has of late been the subject of much conjecture, and has caused some farmers in this vicinity to look for buyers for their stored crop even at prices which at the present time range around $4.

Not so very many weeks ago farmers were getting $5.50 and looking for more. Some farmers, however, expecting a brightening of the market are holding their stock.

The warehouses of the shippers in this district are plugged to the vent holes and at present it is reported there is not much chance of moving any of this stock.

Shippers Gone to U. S.

Some of the shippers have left for the United States in order to get first hand information relating to the embargo now on potatoes entering Boston, New York and certain other large centres in the United States.

H. H. Hatfield, of the firm of Hatfield & Co., Ltd., has been in Boston for several days looking after business matters at that end of the line, and reports that there does not seem to be any letting up in the quantity of potatoes pouring into that market. There appears, he says, to be an abundance of spuds at the present time, but how long this feast will last is a matter of conjecture.

Trade Journal's View.

At any rate the local shippers are going slowly, and a man has to make them a very good offer before they will accept. It is rumored here that a certain shipper up river has in the vicinity of ninety thousand barrels of choice stock ready for shipment, and is only waiting an opportune moment to unload.

Whether the congestion in the United States markets will keep up till after the freeze-up one cannot say, but the fact that the markets are being well supplied is evidence that farmers are satisfied with the price paid, and willing to sell and ship at that price rather than risk holding and possible loss through a drop in the market, says the New York packer. On the Western potato States of Wisconsin, Dakota and Michigan, the early frost did a great amount of damage.

Reported Increase.

The United States crop report issued on Nov. 10, was awaited with eagerness by the shippers of this locality, and it reported an increase of 2,296,000 bushels over the report of October. This report, says the Produce News, would suggest a drop in price in the face of it, but when investigated, it is learned that many of the figures of the report were made before the fifteenth of last month, and the frosts of the latter part of October did great damage to the crop in the United States.

Says Frosts Costly.

The latest edition of the New York Packer has reports which go to show that after the Department of Agriculture reports had been made up at Washington there were frosts of such intensity that much of the crop that was in the ground undug was so badly damaged that it had to be dumped. This loss by frost would tend to make the estimates as given out on the 10th of this month too great, and suggest that the most likely figure of the total crop of potatoes in the United States, which figure will be given out early in December, will show a decrease below the figures given out in October by about two million bushels, says one paper.

Look For Betterment.

The Bureau at Washington that figured out this report, says The Houlton Times, has added in some of the figures of the tentative report that included the crop of the early producing States, and the crop of these States should not be figured into the present report, for the crop of these States has already been dug and for the most part consumed. A careful analysis of the figures shows that there is a decrease in the late producing States during the month of October amounting to almost 3,500,000 bushels.

The time when things will brighten up in the potato business is approaching, it is believed. That time will bring happiness to the grower as well as to the shipper who has taken most of the chances this fall. The farmer has been fortunate, and unless the market rises there will be several potato shippers who will not ship next year.

Dull in Aroostook.

Houlton, Me., Nov. 23—There was practically no Aroostook potato market today, neither growers nor buyers being inclined to do business. Snow and rain prevail in Northern Maine and the roads, except those improved are almost impassable. Buyers intimated that they would pay $5 to $5.50 a barrel with few or no takers.

SHOT DEAD IN CHICAGO

Chicago, Nov. 22—Gang warfare invaded the coroner's inquest in Chicago which Sam Vinci, attending an inquest into the death of his brother, Mike, whipped out a pistol and shot to death John Minatti, a witness.

For a moment after the crack of the pistol shot, the court room sat silent and amazed as Minatti crumpled in his chair. Then there was a wild scramble for exits. A policeman sitting near Vinci grabbed his pistol before he could pull the trigger a second time. Joseph and Peter Vinci, brothers of the slayer, and all members of the Vinci family of gangsters were arrested. Vinci told the police he believed Minatti had killed his brother Mike. He also maintained that Minatti was implicated in the death of another Vinci brother, slain a year ago.

London, Nov. 23—Austen Chamberlain, the Foreign Secretary, was entertained at a non-political dinner given by men prominent in art, science, the professions and business, regardless of their party affiliations, as evidence of the national appreciation of the services he rendered in the negotiations at Locarno which brought about the security pact.

T. P. O'Connor, who presided, proposed the toast to King George, saying: "I ask you to drink the toast to His Majesty the King in silence, and to send him in this dark hour deep sympathy in his bereavement, for today, though Sovereign of a great Empire, we can only regard him as a child sitting beside the mother he loved."

ACQUITTED AT TORONTO

Toronto, Nov. 20—Andrew H. Peppall, acquitted yesterday on four charges of theft and bribery in connection with the provincial government bond transactions, will leave for California tomorrow. He was extradited from the Pacific state to face the charges.

It is estimated that Peppall's trial, including his extradition, and the expenses of a commission to take evidence in England, will cost the crown and the defense approximately $100,000.

Penalty Was Imposed.

In the case against the Power Construction Co. for violation of laws regarding the storage of explosives, the charge was acknowledged and Police Magistrate Limerick imposed a penalty of $25 fine or thirty days' imprisonment. The Dominion Police prosecuted.

THE LATE QUEEN ALEXANDRA WAS BORN A NURSE; ALWAYS INTERESTED IN THAT KIND OF WORK

(Toronto Globe.)

Queen Alexandra, whose passing is mourned the world over, possessed in a high degree all the qualities which are most to be desired—but are not always found—in those who minister to the sick. She had a sympathetic nature, great self-control, a gentleness of spirit that expressed itself in a voice that charmed and soothed the tired sufferer, and a practical experience gained in many vigils by the bedside of the suffering.

In all matters relating to the nursing profession the late Queen had always taken the keenest interest, and there is no doubt that her Majesty did a vast deal to raise the standard and tone of one of the noblest callings to which women can devote themselves.

"I have always taken a sincere and intense interest in nurses and nursing, and it affords me heartfelt satisfaction to be associated with you in your labors of love and charity." In these words, which the Queen Mother addressed to the band of Queen Victoria's Jubilee nurses that gathered together at Marlborough House in July, 1901, to receive their badges from the President, the Queen, her Majesty spoke the simple truth.

In nurses and nursing she had ever taken a sincere and most intense interest. It was at her Majesty's instigation that the Finsen Light Treatment for lupus was introduced; it was first tried at the London Hospital in 1899, the first patient to be treated being a poor young girl, and the expense of the treatment was defrayed by the Queen out of her private purse. It will never be known how many cases of sickness among the poor Queen Alexandra helped to nurse, both by personal service and by aid from her private purse; the number must be very large, and it is doubtful if ever a poor suppliant in sickness made appeal to the Queen in vain.

"It is an object lesson in tending to the sick to watch her Majesty in a sick-room," wrote an admirer in an English weekly some years ago. "Her manner of arranging the pillows is so deft, yet rapid, disturbing the patient not at all; her voice is so gentle, her movements are so silent, and her smile—how full of sweetness it is, how inexpressibly kind and tender!"

"When the Queen enters a sick-room she will give one swift, penetrating, comprehensive glance round the apartment, and in that instant she will take in everything that has been done for the welfare of the patient, and note anything that has been left undone. She will know if the temperature of the room, is correct, if the pillows are properly arranged, if the light is too strong, or, on the other hand, insufficient; and with what a kind and gracious glance she will reward 'Nurse' when all is as it should be."

Her Majesty, we are told, was very careful of the comfort and well-being of the nurses she employed. She expected the nurses to carry out their duties attentively and intelligently, but she never permitted them to overwork or overtire themselves, though any nurse who once had the good fortune to serve in the Royal household would afterward willingly work to breaking-point for that gracious lady who was ever thinking of the welfare and comfort of her dependents before her own.

Here is an instance of Queen Alexandra's consideration for others in their affliction which came directly under one writer's notice. A young girl of very poor parents, who lived in Cork, was suffering from lupus; the doctors recommended her to go into a hospital for the light treatment; but, unfortunately, there were at that time only a few hospitals in Ireland where it could be obtained, and they were full.

The girl, as a last resource, wrote to Queen Alexandra asking her to aid her to get into some hospital. This was at the time when the Queen was with King Edward on board the Royal yacht, just after his Majesty's recovery from his illness in 1902.

Her Majesty, though she had then very many affairs to occupy her mind and time, did not put the girl's application to one side, as many ladies would have done. A week after the girl had written to her Majesty she received an order admitting her to a London hospital.

FATHER WOULD NOT SIGN FOR YOUNG CORMIER

Montreal, Nov. 20—Fans who witnessed the exhibition hockey match at the Forum between the Canadiens and the Victoria Cougars probably wondered why the new recruit to the French-Canadian team's ranks, Roger Cormier, was out of uniform.

Here is the answer: Cormier, it was announced a few days ago, signed a contract with Leo Dandurand, managing director of the Canadiens. He did all right; but Cormier is only twenty years of age, and therefore also needs his father's signature to make it legal.

It had been understood by the Canadian club that his father's permission had been granted. However, yesterday the elder Cormier, who is at present in Toronto for the Winter Fair, wired that he had decided not to sign the contract.

Of course, Mr. Dandurand could have played Cormier, made him a pro, and forced agreement on the part of Cormier, Sr., but the Canadian manager said he was anxious to protect all amateurs and rather than have anything crop up to injure the boy until everything had been straightened out, he had ordered him not to don his hockey togs. And so it was that Cormier in street clothes watched his erstwhile team mates "strut their stuff."

U. N. B. Club at Moncton.

At a meeting of graduates of the University of New Brunswick held in Moncton recently it was decided to form a graduates' society similar to those existing in other cities. The following officers were elected: C. J. Milligan, president; O. L. Barbour, vice-president; Mrs. George Clark, secretary-treasurer. Other members of the executive appointed were J. D. McBeath, H. H. Trimble and Miss Bernice MacNaughton. The meeting passed a resolution of congratulations to the U. N. B. football team on its recent victory in Montreal when they lifted the MacTier Cup and the resolution was ordered forwarded to the captain and manager of the team.
