JACK MINER'S WILD GEESE START RELIGIOUS REVIVALS

Atlanta, Ga., Sept. 9.—Messages from the Bible found attached to the legs of wild geese killed recently in the South have thrown Negro communities into a religious turmoil which hasn't subsided yet, despite the fact that the birds didn't come from Heaven at all, but from Jack Miner's sanctuary in Canada, where wild creatures gather by the thousands because they know they are safe from harm.

After the first of the geese was slain by the Negro pastor of a little Baptist church in Mississippi, the report spread that a bird had come down from Heaven with a message of Holy Writ tied to its leg and indications were that the end of the world was close at hand.

When another goose bearing another scriptural message was killed in another locality, the theory gained new strength and revivals began to spring up, such as even Negro communities seldom know.

In the meantime, word drifted down from the far north that an Indian settlement in the Hudson Bay country was feeling much the same way about the matter because there, too, a wild goose killed earlier in the season had been found to have a verse from the Bible printed on a metal tag attached to its leg.

Geese at Evangelists.

With two such widely separated sections of the continent stirred by this apparent miracle, news came that the geese were from Jack Miner's sanctuary in Canada and that it has become his custom to tag many of the birds with verses of the Bible, in the hope that fowls of the air may be used for missionary purposes.

Miner's success has been beyond anything he could have imagined. His wild geese have done an evangelical work that even Billy Sunday himself could not have accomplished.

Miner was one of the greatest hunters along the northern shore of Lake Erie until a few years ago when he had a complete change of heart. It came about in an odd way. He was waiting under a blind, furnished largely by an old blanket, for a shot at wild geese.

The geese alighted and began feeding, seemingly without any fear of men working in nearby fields. But at his first movement they flew away. They knew him as an enemy, Miner reasoned; could they be taught to know him as a friend?

Near the little town of Kingsville, close to Windsor, Ont., he set about establishing himself as the friend instead of the enemy of wild birds. He planted grain for them on his big farm and he clipped the wings of seven Canada geese and turned them loose on a pond there.

Refuge For Thousands.

Finally, eleven wild geese came and settled down beside the wing-clipped one. They were fed and remained three weeks. Thirty-two came the next year, 400 the next and the number steadily increased until as many as 9,000 wild geese have visited the Miner ponds within a year. More than 4,000 bushels of corn on the cob and nearly 7,000 bushels of shelled corn are needed to feed them.

Whistling swans and various other birds are to be found on this sanctuary furnished by the 30 acres of the Miner farm.

Being interested in the range of birds during their migrations, Miner tagged many of the wild geese and later he had messages from the Bible printed on these tags.

"Who knows, into whose hands these messages will fall and what effect they will have?" he reasons. "Wild geese may be turned into missionaries."

And they have, to an extent that has been amazing among Indians in the Hudson Bay country and Negro communities in the far South.

"Thought you had a date with Helen tonight?"

"Well, when I saw her leave her house at five minutes of eight with some one else, I got sore and called it off."

SOME UNUSUAL BUT TRUTHFUL BITS OF NEWS

Chicago.—Louis Kluge's $2 "peace offering" to a traffic cop who objected to Kluge making a left-hand turn in his automobile most an additional $100 to appease the ethics of the police profession. "It wasn't a bribe—just a peace offering," Kluge pleaded in court. "Officer, take the peace offering," the judge directed and then fined Kluge $100 for attempting to bribe an officer for attempting to bribe an officer and $1 for making the left-hand turn.

Chicago.—Bernard Shaw is "a brilliant old gentleman," but he missed fire when he said, "He who can, does; he who cannot, teaches." Superintendent William McAndrew so told Chicago teachers on the first day of the 1926-27 school year. McAndrew said: "He who can, does he who can't doesn't; he who teaches both can and does."

Pittsburgh.—Discriminating drivers are not parking their cars in front of city detective headquarters any more. Within the last several days two cars left there have been stolen. And what is more the machines belonged to detectives.

Smithfield, Mass.—The first airplane service station is open for business and the vaudeville joke about an air chauffeur getting out to crank may be approaching reality. Multiplicity of landing fields is the most urgent need for expansion of aviation, says the local pioneer.

New York.—There will be no plagiarism suit between Wherwood Anderson and Theodore Dreiser over the remarkable similarity of the latter's recent poem, "The Beautiful Snow," to a much earlier Anderson product. "It's just one of those accidents," said Mr. Anderson. "If Dreiser expressed the thought beautifully that's enough for me."

New York.—Enter the "two-gun woman." Mrs. Helen Kennedy, 26 arrested in connection with a burglary was relieved of a brace of loaded revolvers at police station.

Buffalo.—Immigration quotas will mean nothing to one favored nation if the fight started by Job Henry is successful. As a member of the Tuscarora Indians Henry says he had the right under an old treaty to enter and leave American territory at will.

Paris.—Restaurant and hotel menus are restricted to just two principal courses under a new ordinance. The exceptions are generous, salads, cold meats, game, sweets and deserts.

New York.—Frank Wells, son of H. G. Wells, and just out of college is here for a stay of 10 days, during which he hopes to learn something about being a cinema director.

Cape Griz Nez.—Miss Darwin, an English girl, who goes under an assumed name, is ready to try to beat Trundle's record and win $5,000. Helmy won't help her. His doctors have ordered him to warm up in Egypt till next year.

Maid (at door)—Madam forgot to leave the money for your bill.

Creditor—How do you know she forgot?

Maid—She told me so when she went out.
