A SOVIET TREND IN DIRECTION OF TOLERATION IS NOW SEEN IN THE RUSSIAN POLICY

London, Jan. 28.—The British press has been following with the closest attention the important political developments reported in Soviet Russia, where the moderates appear to have wrested the power from the Bolshevik die-hards. The victory of men like Stalin, Rykoff and Bukharin over extremists like Zinovieff, Kalneff and Sokolnikoff, won at the stormy session of the Communist party Congress and confirmed in the new appointments to the Soviet Cabinet, announced last week, is hailed in England as the most important advance that Russia has made toward rejoining the society of capitalists nations since Lenin initiated his famous "Nep" almost five years ago.

It is interpreted here to mean that Russia has realized the supreme importance of renewing trade relations with the United States, Great Britain and France, and that, so long as irresponsible fire-eaters like Zinovieff, the notorious president of the Third Internationale, who was responsible for the failure of the MacDonald government's Anglo-Russian treaty of 1924, through propaganda campaigns in foreign countries, are allowed to go unchecked, economic relations between Russia and those countries never can be placed on a satisfactory footing.

Return to Capitalism Hinted.
"The Westminster Gazette" voiced the general sentiment of Great Britain on political changes in Moscow when it said: "What has happened is a matter of first-class importance to the rest of Europe, for it means that there is now definite hope that Russia may emerge from its deadly miasma of Communism into the light of political and economic sanity once more."

Undoubtedly there is a basis of truth in Zinovieff's charges that an effort is being made to lead Russia back "to the sloughs of capitalism" and to undo the work of Lenin. For instance, it has been the policy of the moderate majority, led by Stalin, Bukharin, Rykoff and Kallinin, to offer concessions to the peasant bourgeoisie by permitting them to rent and hire peasant labor.

Opposition to this policy is strongest in Leningrad, where Zinovieff's prestige is most powerful and where factory workers grumble that the fruits of the revolution are being garnered by the new middle-class peasant, who is just as objectionable as was the Czarist bourgeoisie. In addition, the Zinovieff opposition has complained that the state trusts are nearly identical with capitalistic corporations.

Zinovieff tried to capitalize the discontent of the town workers and of the landless peasants by getting the Communist party to admit them to its ranks. Moderate leaders saw through this transparent maneuver and refused to increase the body of 700,000 well trained men who compose the Communist party of Russia.

Stalin Acknowledged Leader.

In the opinion of these critics recent discussions of the central committee reveal a fundamental weakness of the Soviet Russian government as it exists at present. The announcement of the new Russian Cabinet is taken to mean that the once united triumvirate of Stalin, Kameneff and Zinovieff has been dissolved and that Stalin, a Georgian by birth and an orthodox Christian in religion, is in the saddle.

Kameneff suffers the heaviest fall as a result of leading the fight against the Moderates at the party congress. He lost both his post as Deputy Prime Minister and his office as president of the Council for Labor and Defense, in which he exercised dictatorial decisions made by any separate commissariat. He is replaced by Premier Rykoff, who, like Lenin before him, now holds both the Premiership and the labor commissariat.

Zinovieff escapes more lightly, but his prestige has been severely damaged. Another rebel is Sokolnikoff, who, as Soviet Secretary of the Treasury, deserves credit for protecting the value of the Chervonetz currency by his clever manipulations of the nation's gold and platinum reserves. He, like Kameneff, has been ousted from his job and put into a minor position.

With the die-hards like Zinovieff and Kameneff defeated, the way seems open for moderates—aided by skillful envoys abroad like Krassin and Rakovsky, whose labors hitherto largely have been frustrated by the Extremists, to negotiate trade agreements with foreign countries.

ENGLISH PROHIBITION IS WORKING ONLY PART TIME

London, England, Jan. 28.—Many American visitors to England are amazed to discover that a partial prohibition exists, not only prohibition of alcoholic drinks, but of such articles as chocolate tea biscuits and fried herring—a partial prohibition that is frequently more annoying than the real thing.

There prohibitions are a hangover from the war regulations—the defense of the realm act—which became famous in England—or infamous—as "Dora." Their aim was to save light, coal and food, to darken the city shortly after sundown and in other ways to economize during the war period.

Now, after seven years they are still part of the law or the land and strange anomalies persist. For instance; In most parts of London alcoholic drinks may not be sold except between the hours of 11 o'clock in the morning and 3 in the afternoon and between 5 in the afternoon and 10 in the evening. During other hours "pubs" are closed—effectively.

Cross the Street for a Drink.

But in different boroughs in London different regulations are in force. Thus, one may drink till 10 p. m. on the north side of Oxford street and until 10.30 on the south side. As a result this half hour sees a great southerly migration every evening.

These liquor restrictions were only incidentally a "prohibition" measure. Their primary reason was not to bar alcohol. They were designed to save beer and save light and clear the streets early.

Even in hotels and clubs, to the annoyance of many people, similar regulations are in force. Theoretically drinking stops in all clubs at midnight during the week and at 10 p. m. Sundays. Some night clubs are given a special license to keep open till 2 a. m.

It is astonishing to an American how faithfully these regulations are carried out. It is impossible in London to get into a saloon before 11 o'clock in the morning or in mid-afternoon. They are barred and padlocked. Very nearly the same law-abiding spirit, although with more grumbling, holds true in the clubs. At midnight, sharp, the glasses are whisked away.

Other Regulations Irritating.

But it is not in regard to alcohol that the holdover war restrictions are most obnoxious. Indeed, except in clubs, almost every one approves of the drinking regulations. Not so with the others. Indeed, considered in almost any light they remain as a somewhat ridiculous war hangover with little excuse for being. For instance, Cigarettes may not be sold in London even in restaurants after 8 p. m. Nor cigars! Nor tobacco!

The shopkeepers get around this regulation by faithfully closing their shops at 8, and then opening cabinets in front of the shops, which eject small packets of cigarettes when a sixpence is put into a slot.

Cigarettes by cabinet are legal: over the counter they are illegal.

Again! Ice cream may be served after 9.30 p. m. only if it is part of a meal. Chocolate of any kind or description, even cooking chocolate, may not be sold after 8 p. m.

This restriction causes a curious sequence of refreshments in west-end centers, most of which maintain a bar or refreshment counter for use between the acts. Chocolate may be had only before the performance. Ice cream may be had after the first act, if the first act ends before 9.30—not otherwise.

Other Mays and May Nots.

Not only drinks and other stimulants and refreshments come under the "Dora" ban, but also staple foodstuffs. You may not buy buns, cakes or any form of sweet pastry after 8 o'clock, although bread may be sold till 9.30.

You may not buy apples, bananas, grapefruit, pineapples, walnuts, dates, lemons, or oranges after 8 o'clock, but green figs, apricots and loganberries may be had till midnight.

You may buy cold meat, such as ham or beef, after 9 o'clock only if you eat tinned sardines, smoked herring or canned lobster after 9.30 o'clock, although you may buy fresh plaice or sole freely.

You may buy roasted peanuts at any hour, since they qualify as "fresh food," but not, say, a ham pie or a can of beans, except before 8 o'clock.

You may not buy aspirin or other headache powder at any chemist's after 9 o'clock except under clear case of necessity. You may not buy tripe after 8 o'clock unless it would become unfit or less suitable for food if kept till midnight. You may not buy pork pies, saveloys, roast pork, or pig's feet, unless the pork butcher first warms them.

Naturally, with some of the regulations of no conceivable application now, no matter how valuable they may have been in war time, and indeed with some of them openly farcical, there is a good deal of opinion directed toward repealing them. Indeed, the present parliament has promised to investigate the matter.

The alcohol and tobacco regulations will probably stick—but the others seem pretty certain to go.

The end of the hard coal strike is said to be in sight, but the big iden is to get it in anthracite.

Don't Cough Your Head Off Don't Cough All Night Long

Mrs. Thos. Gilbert, Welland, Ont., writes: "Some time ago I took a very severe cold, and it settled on my lungs."

I coughed day and night, and had such severe pains, in my chest I could hardly bear them, but finally I sent and got a bottle of

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup

After I had taken a couple of doses I found that my cough was relieved and the pains were all gone, and by the time I had finished taking the whole bottle I was completely rid of my trouble.

Now I will never be without a bottle of "Dr. Wood's" in my home. Put up only by the T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

BLUNDERS

After a boy returns from a day's fishing to his mother, she says: "E. L. Thomas, 216 Fourth Ave. Calgary, Alta."

WHY IS THIS WRONG?

Thousands of letters are delayed in delivery from two to ten hours in big cities because business men do not place their return street address on letterheads and envelopes. Even though a company may be an important one, all postal employees do not have its address committed to memory. Consequently its mail will surely be delayed if persons who must reply to its letters are given no street address.
