British Columbia's 67th Birthday

The monument on the Heights to pioneer geographers and explorers. Stepping forward proudly, Captain Robert E. Barkley, great-grandson of the intrepid explorer, drew aside the draped flags of Britain and Castile, emblems of the glamour of picturesque days of another era, revealing the cairn with its modest bronze tablet.

Among the other prominent participants in the ceremony were: John W. Dolby, of Seattle, Vice-Consul for Spain; Hon. Walter C. Nicholl, Lieutenant Governor of British Columbia; His Honor, Judge Howay, of New Westminster, President of the British Columbia Historical Association; Reeve Anson, representing Oak Bay Municipality; also members of the family of Sir James Douglas, first governor of British Columbia, and of Captain William Henry McNeill, who made a report to the Hudson's Bay Company in 1831 upon the suitability of the present site of the City of Victoria for the erection of a fort.

In his opening address, Hon. Walter Nicholl referred to the great debt owed the pioneers who had willingly dared all in their voyage of discovery. The speaker also reviewed the great potential resources of the new land they had taken possession of on the Western rim of the World.

In the course of the proceedings credit was repeatedly given the Victoria Branch of the British Columbia Historical Association to whom, through the efforts of C. C. Pemberton and others, the amassing of so much historical detail was due.

Under a glorious sky late in November an expectant group of distinguished Canadians were gathered for the unveiling of an ornamental cairn at Gonzales Heights, Victoria, B.C., commemorating the early British and Spanish navigators who explored the Pacific coast in the eighteenth century. The ceremony also marked the sixty-seventh anniversary of the existence of the province of British Columbia.

flown by since Captain Charles William Barkley, in command of the picturesque British trading vessel the Imperial Eagle, sailed up the straits of Juan de Fuca searching for the mythical Northwest passage which would provide an alternative route from Atlantic to Pacific and also the greatly desired short cut to the Indies.

The ceremony of the unveiling of the cairn was impressive, as befitted a public demonstration of gratitude

MRS. JOHN T. PRATT OUSTS
CRASHERS AT DAUGHTER'S DANCE

(New York Herald)

The recent outcry of Miss Ellin Mackay and other young women in society against the presence of hordes of uninvited young men who "crashed the gate" at functions and made the stag line a horror has borne fruit in society's determination to stamp out the evil.

Mrs. John T. Pratt, of 7 East Sixty-first Street, the first woman member of the Board of Aldermen and for many years a recognized social leader, has taken the lead in combating the gate crashers and it is expected that her example will be followed by others.

Mrs. Pratt gave one of the largest dances of the season at the Hotel Ritz Carlton last week for her debutante daughter, Miss Sally Pratt, and some 700 invitations were sent out. Word of the event spread throughout the clubs and among the colleges near by and several hundred more men than had been invited made their appearance on the night of the function. But they did not get into the dance, because one of Mrs. Pratt's secretaries sat the entrance with a typewritten list of the guests, and young men whose names were not on the list were politely but firmly told that they could not enter.

Something of this sort has been done for some time, not only by Mrs. Pratt but by others of the most conservative hostesses and the committees in charge of such affairs as the Junior Assemblies, and the secretary with the typewritten list will, it is believed, become an accepted part of the routine of a correct function. For a time it was felt that the sending of a ticket of invitation might suffice, but it soon developed that the vast majority of young men promptly lost their tickets, so that such a scheme would have prevented many of those actually invited from entering.

Miss Mackay's denunciation of the uninvited guest, who is frequently a person that no one cares to know, is said to have had a great deal to do with the new attitude of society. Many other young women have voiced their objection to being compelled to dance with a young man they did not know and for whom no one could vouch, but Miss Mackay was the only one who succeeded in obtaining any considerable publicity. So long as the young women made no concerted move or objection against the uninvited man he was suffered to attend functions so long as he was not actually impossible.

The social gate crasher is considered a natural development of the growth of society and of the cutting-in-system at dances. When society was comparatively small the butler and other servants of a home usually knew all of the guests by sight and the successful invader was rare. But names to the lists of society the intruder came into his own, and hordes of young men during the last few years have succeeded in attending many affairs without being invited to any of them.

Under the present arrangements, when a mother gives a dance for her daughter, she is compelled to invite 300 or 400 girls, not all of whom she or her daughter could possibly know. The presence of the girls required the presence of about two dancing men to a girl, so that the attendance at a big dance was about a thousand. Many times the matter of invitations was left in the hands of a social secretary, who had lists of acceptable young men, principally prepared from the membership lists of college fraternities and undergraduate clubs.

Another source of eligible young men was the girls themselves. Often a hostess would invite a girl and say "Just bring a few boys with you," or a girl who had been invited would call up and say, "I am bringing a few extra men," often without giving their names. The result was that young men invited to attend functions given by people they did not know told their friends, and the word was spread, so that when the function occurred the stag line would be congested. The young men were unconcerned about the lack of hospitality from their hostess; the affairs were so large that they seldom saw their hostess, and if they were good dancers they were certain of a welcome from any girl they changed to know among the throng.

This condition of affairs began to

MODERATE
INDULGENCE
IS APPROVED

New York, Jan. 9—Moderate indulgence in all "so called vices" was given as the secret of longevity by Dr. Adolf Lorenz, 72 year old Viennese surgeon when he arrived on the Bergengaria.

"To reach a ripe old age," he said "and still be of service, one should indulge moderately in all the so called vices. I have done it all my life. I have always partaken, moderately, of alcoholic drinks because alcohol taken in medicinal quantities is the best thing for the system."

Dr. Lorenz said that the purpose of his visit is to call on many of the patients he treated when he was here four years ago. While here he said he may conduct a few clinics.

LEMON MARMALADE.

Eight lemons cut very thin. Remove seeds but not the skin. To each pound of fruit add three pints of cold water and let stand 24 hours. Cook until transparent, about 20 minutes, and let stand another 24 hours. Then add one pound sugar to each pound of fruit and juice and boil about 20 minutes.

When scrambling eggs, piece them out, and add variety by means of a half cup hot puffed wheat. Heat the puffed wheat in a buttered pan, shaking or stirring to keep the grains from burning. Put the eggs into another pan, with sufficient fat, turn the hot wheat berries over them and cook, stirring slightly from time to time.

be felt in other ways than by congestion of the stag line, and the practice of "cutting in" until sometimes a girl would have to dance with eight or ten men in the course of one dance. It seems to be noticed in the matter of food and refreshments. A hostess would engage her caterer to provide for a certain number and there was always confusion when this number was doubled or tripled. At one of the large dances given by a noted New York family a year ago three hundred more persons presented themselves for supper than the caterer was prepared to serve.
