MR. CHAMBERLAIN WILL GO TO GENEVA WITH A FREE HAND; HOUSE ENDORSES PROGRAM

London, March 4—The net result of today's debate in the House of Commons on the Geneva meeting of the League of Nations, March 8 was to leave matters much as they were inasmuch as Sir Austen Chamberlain, Secretary for Foreign Affairs, will go to Geneva with a free hand. He announced himself, however in agreement with the policy of the government and the nation to do nothing to hurt Germany's chance of becoming a member of the League.

Germany, through its ambassador in London, has suggested a round-table conference on the dispute over enlargement of the League of Nations Council.

Program Endorsed.

Mr. Chamberlain revealed this, just before the close of the debate. The House of Commons later endorsed the government's league council program by a vote of 224 to 124.

"The German ambassador called on me this morning," said Mr. Chamberlain. "Just before I came to the House of Commons. When he suggested a roundtable conference not unlike that held at Locarno, to be held on Sunday in Geneva. I told him that I regarded such a meeting as absolutely vital."

Sir Austen made a long statement in the House, but his speech left the opposition critics unsatisfied. Former Premier Lloyd George with his aptness of phrase, put the matter thus: "The wine of Locarno is already badly corked, due to this unfortunate series of incidents."

The Foreign Secretary set his key note at the start of his speech: "It is a wish very close to my heart that in my tenure of office as Foreign Secretary, I might carry the general sentiment of the nation with me and that nothing in my language or attitude might make this an issue between the parties in this country."

Backed By Baldwin.

Sir Austen was loyally supported by Premier Baldwin, who in his speech winding up the debate ventured to predict that when the Foreign Secretary returned from Geneva those who distrusted him would be the first to acknowledge that he had built still another stone in the temple of European peace.

Both the prime minister and the foreign secretary strongly emphasized that Great Britain was only a single nation at Geneva and therefore could neither be arbiter of the agenda or avoid consideration of the desires and ambitions of other countries.

One Nation Can't Rule.

Sir Austen insisted on the impossibility of any single nation seeking to lay down in advance a plan of action for the league council and assembly. The right of Germany, the United States and Russia to permanent seats when they sought them was unquestioned, but similar claims of other nations was a matter for an interchange of ideas and free play of thought within the body of the assembly. To one thing the British government would never lend itself,—trying to recreate in the league council camps of opposing forces which were the curse of Europe before the war.

Many Dissatisfied.

The former Labor premier, Ramsay MacDonald and Mr. Lloyd George, with many other opposition speakers expressed dissatisfaction with the secretary's speech mainly on the ground of absence of any pledge to vote against the claims of Poland, Spain and Brazil, should they be submitted, and as seemed likely, supported by France, Italy and other powers.

Mr. Lloyd George, however, obtained from Sir Austen an explicit denial that he had discussed this topic, with the Italian premier, and also a statement that he had not pledged himself or the government with Premier Briand, of France. On the latter point, however, Mr. Lloyd George remarked that on his own recent admissions the foreign secretary must have communicated to M. Briand his sympathies with the aspirations of Poland, Spain and Brazil.

Mr. Lloyd George added, alluding to Anglo-German incident at the last Guildhall banquet, when Germans and British drank together: "The loving cup is being poisoned with suspicion."

Sir Austen in his speech declared he was conscious of the delicacy of the occasion, and hoped he would be able to give the House some satisfaction without increasing the difficulties of anyone else.

Sir Austen said he watched the progress of the international controversy regarding the council of the League with grave anxiety and if the more extreme forms of the controversy are presented the minds of the nations one might take a gloomy view of the situation. However, he was encouraged to hope for better things from the moderation of the statements or representatives of the nations most closely concerned, whether German, French, Belgian or Polish.

Regrets Clash.

He declared the British government shared the widely felt regret that these issues had arisen now, but he would not say it was the fault of anybody. It was, perhaps, inevitable he added.

The foreign secretary said it must be the guiding principle of the British representatives at Geneva that they should be parties to nothing that would endanger the success of the Locarno accords or which would make it impossible for Germany at the last moment to enter the League when she presented herself at its doors.

Back Unanimity.

Sir Austen asserted that the British Government regarded it of first consequence that the intention of Locarno should be fulfilled and that nothing should interfere at the last moment to prevent Germany carrying out the intention she there expressed.

Under no circumstances, he continued, would Great Britain be a party to trying to recreate in the council of the League the camps of opposing forces which were the curse of Europe before the Great War. He emphasized the futility of any such attempt.

Sir Austen declared it was essential that the rule of unanimity should be preserved if for no other reason than to prevent that kind of intrigue and to prevent the council being denatured in order to obtain a particular decision.

SNAPPY RECORD TITLES CAUSE WEIRD MIXUPS

(Toledo Blade)

Selling photograph records leads to amusing experiences and sometimes embarrassing situations.

"I want a record, I don't remember the name of it. Something about a bird in the air. No, I don't know how the tune goes," the customer demands, and being in hurry he expects the girl behind the counter to fill his order posthaste.

Lists of all the latest songs are consulted. Nothing there about a bird in the air.

"How would you like this one?" the clerk asks finally in desperation putting the needle on "The World Is Waiting for the Sunrise."

"That's it. That's the one. It's that second line. The thrush on high his sleepy mate is calling, made me think of a bird."

Some customers know several bars of the record that they want. If the young woman in charge of the counter cannot recognize the tune, the customer is led about the store humming and whistling until some other clerk can place the melody.

In what a predicament the record saleswoman would be if she took seriously the things that she hears.

Young men bustle up and burst out, "I love you. Let me call you sweetheart. I want a mamma. I want to go where you go. Are you playing fair?" Yes, they are all names of popular songs.

They say that this conversation took place across the counter one busy Saturday afternoon.

"What can I do for you?"

"I Want a Little Lovin'."

"Just out. Sorry I can't give it to you."

Another time someone inquired about the latest songs. "I'm Sitting on Top of the World." "I Never Knew You" on the other side," came the astounding reply.

Some men leave the impression on us of being carried around in their wives' handbags. Ohio State Journal.—While the early little dogs have more room and consequently more freedom in the satchels used for carrying them around.

THE FRASER COMPANIES MADE LARGE PROFITS IN YEAR 1925

Montreal, March 4—The annual report of Fraser Companies, Limited for the year ended Dec. 31, 1925, shows operating profits of $1,138,081, as against $1,129,324, for the previous year, and after deduction of interest charges, depreciation and depletion there remains a balance available for dividends of $388,528, or approximately $30,000 more than for 1924. Deduction of preferred dividend of $109,868 left a balance of $278,660, which added to previous years' surplus, made a balance of $1,546,939, from which is deducted premium and discount on bond issues redeemed during the year, and commission and discount on securities sold, leaving net profit and loss surplus carried to balance sheet of $1,182,409 as compared with $1,268,278 a year ago.

The principal charges in the balance sheet are an increase of $1,200,000 in working capital, (exclusive of investments, which show an increase of nearly $900,000) an increase of $2,200,000 in property account, (including the Madawaska paper mill of Fraser Paper, Limited), a reduction of $426,000 in bank loans, and the change in capitalization due to the issuance of $6,000,000 of new bonds and $1,950,000 of preferred stock during the year.

"Your directors have adhered to the policy of establishing adequate reserves against depression of fixed assets and depletion of timber areas, and it should be noted that the amount set aside from annual earnings for these purposes, as shown in the appended balance sheet, now reaches the substantial total of $3,799,968.

"Since the close of the year under review your directors have declared a dividend on the company's common shares at the rate of 2 per cent per annum, payable quarterly on the first day of April, July and October, 1926, and on the first day of January, 1927.

to shareholders of record the 15th days of March, June, September and December, 1926."

In his report to shareholders the president, Archibald Fraser, says, in part, as follows:

"The operation of the Madawaska Paper Mill now provides your Edmondston pulp mill with a stable market for a large portion of its output. "Satisfactory progress is being made in the establishment of a permanent market for the product of the Madawaska mill, which is operating at capacity, and in due course, your company should derive considerable profit from its ownership of this property."

The last half of 1925 witnessed an appreciable improvement as regards both demand and price for bleached and easy bleaching sulphite pulp, which enabled your company to show reasonably satisfactory earnings in spite of the fact that the lumber business has not been as active as might be desired. The market for bleached and easy bleaching sulphite pulp continues to improve and is believed now to be definitely stabilized on a normal basis as a result of which your company should show increased earnings for the coming year."

With but a minimum of property connected with the square dances their revival will amount to no more than a passing whim.
