Loyalist Days Near Woodstock Are Remembered.

(Woodstock Sentinel.)

In these days of marking our historical sites with suitable memorials it is interesting to note that, on the interval below the road owned by Messrs. R. R. and T. Dibblee, there is a very large boulder which practically marks the site of the first log house erected by Rev. F. Dibblee, who came here with the United Empire Loyalists as their pastor in 1787.

The Messrs. Dibblee are having an inscription placed on the boulder which reads as follows: "Site of first log house, 1787."

The Loyalist parson, in his diary, refers to this rock as a water mark by which he marked the heights of the yearly spring freshets.

Colonel F. H. J. Dibblee is also interested in marking the first school house in that locality, and other spots of historic interest.

"Family broke," as once applied to the horse, was a recommendation. But keeping the family broke doesn't add to the value of an auto.

The way today.
"Madam do you keep this boarding house?"
"I am the hostess."

GETTING MARRIED IN THE MONTH OF ROSES; DETAILS WHICH CONFRONT THE BRIDES

(By Marion Dallas.)

Many details in connection with the wedding ceremony are requested by correspondents. The suggestions offered here are helpful as being possible of adaptation to suit individual cases. Exact adherence to any form is not necessary, except as required by the service of the church in question. Consultation with the clergyman is valuable as to the arrangement of details.

If the ceremony is to be in a church the ushers must be there before guests arrive. Pews are reserved in the middle aisle for relatives and intimate friends. The ushers have lists of names of those who are to be shown to special seats. The bride's mother and other members of the family arrive shortly before the ceremony and are escorted to front seats. Pews on the left are for the bride's relatives, on the right for those of the bridegroom.

The bride goes to the church in a carriage with her father. The bridesmaids, in carriages provided by the bride's parents, should arrive a little in advance and await the bride in the vestibule or church porch.

The bridegroom and best man arrive at the church together shortly before the bridal party. They follow the clergyman from the vestry room when he enters for the ceremony and they stand on the chancel step facing guests and awaiting the bride.

According to the usual Canadian fashion the ushers lead the procession, two and two, followed by the bridesmaids, two and two, the maid-of-honor walking alone in advance of the bride, who comes up the aisle last, leaning on the right arm of her father or nearest male relative. At the chancel step the ushers separate to right and left, the bridesmaids walk forward, going to each side, the maid-of-honor taking the place at the left of where the bride will be. The bridegroom receives the bride from her father, who then retires and stands back of the bridal pair. When the clergyman asks, "Who giveth this woman to be married to this man?" the bride's father advances, takes her right hand, places it in that of the clergyman, who places it in the right hand of the bridegroom for the plighting of the troth. Having finished this duty, the bride's father retires to the front pew where the bride's mother is, whom he escorts later from the church.

The wedding ring is in the care of the best man, and at the proper time for the giving of the ring, the bride hands her glove and bouquet to the maid-of-honor, the best man gives the ring to the bridegroom, who passes it to the bride, and she gives it to the clergyman, who returns it to the bridegroom to place on the third finger of the bride's left hand. The circle thus formed is a symbol, as is the ring, of the endless contract made in marriage.

On leaving the church the newly married pair lead the way, the bride taking the right arm of her husband; the maid-of-honor follows alone, then the bridesmaids, two and two, then the ushers.

At the house the newly married pair stand to receive their friends, who are escorted to them by the ushers. The bride is at the right of the bridegroom, the maid-of-honor next to the bride; the bridesmaids are on each side, one in advance of the other. The best man assists in escorting guests to greet the bridal pair.

The bride's mother stands where she may welcome guests; the bride's father does not stand with her but mingles with the guests.

At a home ceremony the order of entering a room is essentially the same as at a church. The guests are received by the bride's mother. The father does not appear until he brings the bride into the room for the ceremony. An aisle may be formed by having white ribbons fastened at the doorway, and two ushers or two young girls carry the ribbons forward to the place for the ceremony. Through this aisle the wedding party advances.

The chief aim at a home wedding is to have everything as simply arranged as possible. A few formalities are necessary in order that all may be done in a dignified manner and without confusion, but it is desirable to avoid anything that detracts from the serious nature of the ceremony. If it is preferred to have cushions on which the bride and bridegroom may kneel during the service, they may be placed in position before the guests arrive, and removed unobtrusively by an usher after the ceremony. During the ceremony the members of the bridal party have their backs to the guests, the clergyman facing them as in church. After the ceremony the clergyman congratulates the newly married pair and then retires, and they turn to be greeted by their friends.

to run his own policies within the Liberal party machines.

Labor Party Doomed.

The former premier shows no disposition to resign leadership of the Liberals in the House of Commons as the Earl of Oxford has suggested and speculation is rife as to the issue of the quarrel. Will the members of the party in the House compel his resignation. If not will Oxford himself resign?

In any case the rupture has added to the calamities of the party which seems to be in the last stages of dissolution. With the Labor party at sixes and sevens and engaged in violent public recriminations in regard to the humiliating catastrophe of the general strike, the position of Mr. Baldwin's government seems unassailable and a generation of uninterrupted conservative supremacy seems probable.

Only a very sensational turn of events could bring Labor back, for the general strike has broken the party into fragments—Ramsay MacDonald declaring that the strike was constitutional and the extremists contending that it was intended to be an attack on the constitution.

Charges of treachery and cowardice fill the air and the whole organization is as disorganized as an army in flight.

END OF COAL STRIKE IN THE OLD COUNTRY IS NOT IN SIGHT

London, June 5—The British coal strike enters its second month with a universal feeling of hopelessness. With the rejection of Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin's scheme by both masters and men, the government has retired from the struggle, leaving the issue to the combatants.

How long the miners can hold out is a question on which there is wide difference of opinion. The longest term predicted is three months but this probably is excessive. The condition of the miners in some districts, especially in South Wales, already approaches starvation and though relief is coming from many quarters at home and abroad, it is trivial in comparison to the needs of the strikers.

The reserve of coal is sufficient to tide the country over any reasonable period, but the effects on trade are beginning to be visible, and since the general strike the railways have reduced their service 50 per cent to economize on fuel.

Boomerang to Miners.

Though no formal negotiations are proceeding, feelers toward district settlements are being thrown out and it is probable that in the course of a week or two there will be symptoms of surrender. For with the failure of the general strike, the miners were left without power to enforce their demands.

When the settlement comes it is inevitable that many mines will be closed permanently, and it is estimated that 200,000 miners will be left unemployed.

The political world is all agog over the Earl of Oxford and Asquith's denunciation of David Lloyd George's attitude toward the general strike. Lloyd George expected a long struggle and urged negotiation with the Trade Union Council. He refused to attend a meeting of the Liberal "shadow cabinet" on the ground of the Earl of Oxford's and Lord Grey's support of the government's refusal to negotiate until the general strike order had been withdrawn.

The incident has brought a domestic quarrel which had rent the Liberal party for years to come. The quarrel has centered on Lloyd George, whose return to the party after the Conservatives destroyed the coalition, has been a source of bitter internal dissension. Lloyd George contributed to the suspicion with which he was regarded by sticking to the great party fund which he collected as head of the coalition, and which enabled him

HOW do you spell "financially?" asked a college student of his room-mate.

"F-i-n-a-n-c-i-a-l-l-y," said the room-mate, spelling out the word slowly. As an afterthought, he added: "And 'embarrassed' has two r's and two s's."

How often have you said to a salesman, "That's more than I care to pay"? If you had known the price in advance you would have been spared this little embarrassment. That's one of the great services rendered by newspaper advertising.

By reading the newspaper advertisements before going to the stores, you know what you will have to pay for an article. You need not reveal your financial status to a salesman. You perhaps do not like to ask the price of goods anyhow. If the merchant has told you the price in his newspaper advertisement, you do not have to ask.

Any way you figure it out, IT PAYS YOU TO READ THE NEWSPAPER ADVERTISEMENTS. REGULARLY! The one advertisement you skip may contain just the news you would have welcomed. READ ALL THE NEWSPAPER ADVERTISEMENTS. KEEP INFORMED.

The intelligent way to shop is to read the newspaper advertisements and then go to the stores that offer the best values. Make notes beforehand of the articles that interest you. That's the way to get the most for your money. That's the way to save time.
