WOULD HAVE NOVA SCOTIA MAKE HER OWN TARIFF AND CONTROL HER OWN TREATIES

Halifax, Aug. 12—A recasting of the British North America Act to the end that Nova Scotia be permitted to make her own tariff policies and exercise full control of her fisheries and, failing this, "an early separation from the Dominion of Canada and a dissolution of the present partnership, in order that Nova Scotia may become again a self-supporting, self-respecting, self-governing unit in the British Commonwealth," were two alternatives to the present situation held out today by Clifford L. Baker on behalf of the League for the Economic Independence of Nova Scotia before the Royal Commission investigating the claims of the Maritime Provinces with respect to Confederation.

Closely questioned by the chairman, Sir Andrew Rae Duncan, the witness agreed that if adequate remedies for the economic ills of the province could be found within the Confederation they would be preferable to remedies based on a dissolution of the partnership.

Other Witnesses.

Other witnesses heard this morning were W. Saxby Blair, superintendent of the Dominion Experimental Farm at Kentville, who testified that with the equipment and machinery recently set up by the provincial government a satisfactory colonization policy could now be initiated; Robert Leslie of Woodville, Kings county who appeared in support of the views expressed by Mr. Baker; Professor John Trueman of the Nova Scotia Agricultural College at Truro who told of advances recently made by co-operative marketing methods; Major Hugh Dickson, dairyman, of Truro who advocated a lowering of the tariff and declared that he now realized he had made a mistake in voting against the reciprocity pact of 1911 and Col. Robert Innes, deputy minister of natural resources who submitted figures showing that no great amount of capital was required in Nova Scotia by settlers having the requisite determination to succeed.

W. E. Rundle, vice-president and general manager of the National Trust Co., and receiver and manager of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company, the morning session formally endorsed the representations previously made on behalf of the iron and steel industry of Nova Scotia, by President R. M. Wolvin of the British Empire Steel Corporation. Mr. Rundle stressed the national aspect of the industry.

Alexander Phillippe of Clark's Harbor a practical fisherman was another witness. He advocated the establishment of cold storage facilities at Clark's Harbor, pointing out that the fishermen of that port received from fifty to seventy-five cents per hundred pounds less for their fish than the men fishing out of Yarmouth, 45 miles away. This he ascribed in part to the fact that Yarmouth had cold storage facilities, enabling its fishermen to store their fish pending the establishment of a favorable price in the market.

Halifax Case Put In.

Mayor Kenny, of Halifax, submitted a case for the city of Halifax in which he recommended that the government of Canada should pay to the city its proportion of civic improvement charges for the upkeep of sidewalks, streets, sewerage, etc., police and fire protection and that the Canadian National Railways should pay the full civic taxation on all revenue producing property it occupies in the city, and that the taxes should be paid on all military and naval property. Mayor Kenny submitted that the Canadian National Railways occupies a large area of property in the city on which taxes were not being paid, and since the railway is now constituted with a board of directors and was a revenue producing company, it should not hide behind a technical point that was apparent under the Intercolonial regime.

Salt Company's Brief.

A. R. Chambers, representing the Malagash Salt Company in Cumberland county, presented a brief in which he pointed out some of the difficulties under which that industry labored, and H. S. Congdon, presented himself as a "citizen of Dartmouth" filed a brief which he supplemented by declaring that there was a technical violation of the Confederation pact reacting to the disadvantage of the Maritimes, even though no specifically worded clause in the pact had been violated. Sir Andrew suggested that the witness might mean violation of the spirit of the act, and when Mr. Congdon agreed Sir Andrew said he could not see the difference. "I am glad you don't," said Mr. Congdon.

League's Case Heard.

Clifford L. Baker, president of the League for Economic Independence, editor of the Advertiser, King's county, said his organization had been in existence about one month and had 20 members. It had been organized he said, when it became known that the Royal Commission would investigate Maritime affairs. He presented a pamphlet containing the league's case and was reading it, when adjournment was taken, until 3.30 this afternoon.

CONDENSED MILK ABSOLUTELY PURE

The value of condensed milk as a guardian of health was curiously demonstrated by an item in the London Daily Mail recently, one sentence in the article reading:

"The story had to deal with the activities of the London Zoological Society and was reporting on the health of the animals. Many animals especially those with cloven hooves, were liable to epidemics of bovine tuberculosis. The antelopes seemed to die of nothing else. Yet they lived under very good conditions and were given generous daily draughts of fresh milk. Then the fresh milk was cut off and the tinned variety substituted. A marked improvement followed and tubercle has been stamped out in the antelope paddocks. The Borden Company Limited, who put up Eagle Brand Condensed Milk have long advocated it as an infant food on the ground of its being absolutely pure as well as uniform. This incident would seem to bear out the statement that, save for mother's milk, there is no milk so safe for the infant as Eagle Brand."

COAL CASTS DARK SHADOW OVER BRITISH PARLIAMENT AS SESSION NEARS CLOSE

London, Aug. 12—Under the shadow of the coal stoppage, which has now lasted over three months, the House of Commons this week adjourned until November 9. The last session has not been a remarkable one for the amount of new or striking legislation put on the statute books, but doubtless, it will be remembered in history for its connection with the general strike in the first fortnight of May.

In general, however, it cannot be truthfully said that Parliament as an institution contributed either to the settlement of the general strike or to the amelioration of the coal dispute. The Conservative party has so dominating a majority in the House of Commons that any proposal initiated by the Cabinet is sure to go through by sheer weight of numbers.

Chamberlain Speaks Plainly.

Sir Austen Chamberlain's confession Wednesday that, although the House devoted sixteen days of this session to discussion of industrial troubles "I am not aware that they have contributed materially toward settlement," speaks plainly for the lack of constructive statesmanship brought forth by any party since the session began last autumn.

The fact that for over three months Parliament will meet only for brief intervals to renew emergency powers of legislation consequent upon industrial troubles does not mean, of course that nothing can be done in that time toward ending the deadlock, which it is estimated in one way or another has already cost Great Britain £150,000,000, but it does pretty definitely rule out the possibility of the adoption of any large scale measures, such as are contemplated by the Coal Commission's report.

So far as political position at the end of the Parliamentary session is concerned, the situation is rather obscure. Immediately after ending the general strike Premier Baldwin, because of his handling of the strike itself and his magnanimous attitude toward defeated labor organizations, experienced a remarkable increase in personal popularity. Subsequently, however, with the coal stoppage dragging on, it seemed to some observers that much of this valuable good feeling had been lost.

Labor Gains Strength.

During the recent week a couple of Parliamentary seats have been lost by Conservatives to Labor in by-elections, and while this undoubtedly indicates, as Labor politicians jubilantly contend, a trend to Labor on the part of voters, it has not taken place on a sufficient scale to enable one to read therein any really serious menace to the government. Moreover, it is always accepted as axiomatic in British politics that the party in power will lose more than it wins in by-elections.

There is a certain section of politicians here which believes that if industrial disputes are still unsettled when Parliament reassembles the Baldwin government may be in for a disagreeable time. However, its normal life will not expire until 1929, and there is no reason to believe that the Conservatives intend again to appeal to the country until they are on the ground of their own rather than of their opponent's choice.
