VIOLINS SUPPOSEDLY FROM THE HANDS OF OLD MASTERS; CONSTANTLY DECEIVE UNWARY

Heartbreak room might be a good name for it. And yet it is a beautiful room. The walls are covered with tapestry, the windows are leaded and let in the light through bits of stained glass. In a large case built against one wall hang many old violins, their strings waiting for the touch of a finger or a bow. Masters have made them, fashioning their bodies from precious wood. The grain is brought to a high colored polish. Against another wall stands a row of large black cases which give the observer a start because of their resemblance to coffins. Cellos are concealed in them, silent, waiting to be brought to life by human touch, writes Rose C. Feld in the New York Times.

Through the half-open door comes the sound of a violin being tuned. A bow is run across its strings, chords are sounded, then comes the strains of a familiar melody. It stops, incomplete. The violin has been put down. Human voices are heard in discussion of its quality.

Violin Doctors.

This is the sanctum sanctorum of Jay C. Freeman, said to be the foremost violin expert in this country. He is a member of the Wurlitzer Company, but one never thinks of him as a commercial agent. He is the doctor, the specialist, the man whose opinion is the last word in making a diagnosis. For the last thirty-five years his hands have passed over the curved bodies of violins, viols and cellos. The whole world is his ranging ground, and when he meets an old instrument friend, he greets it kindly.

"Oh, yes," he says, "I met this violin in Florence or Heidelberg, Tours or London."

Games of Violin Art.

When he comes back from one of his trips, violinists and violin experts are eager to know what he has brought with him. The last time he came over instruments valued at $50,000 came with him—two Stradivari. He takes his prizes to his little room on the fourth floor of the Wurlitzer Building and stows them away in a safe. Here, row upon row, lie renowned violin masterpieces. Dark ones, light ones, large and small, Italian,

German, French, English—all speaking the language of individual perfection.

Two famous Stradivari quartettes live in that safe, a quartette consisting of first violin, second violin, viola and cello. This is the most poignant corner of Heartbreak Room, for here it is that the heart of every violinist goes out in an agony of desire and longing. Many budding virtuosi know Mr. Freeman and came to talk with him—to pass their hands over the instruments that are so close, yet so far removed. A string touched in reverence releases a note that finds its echo in futile wishing.

In the middle of the room stands a long table. Here men and women lay down their treasures to be passed upon by the expert and eye of the specialist. He makes a few measurements, passes a hand over the ribs, and back, the belly, the neck of the instrument. He sounds a string; sounds the four strings at once. And then he speaks—too often, alas, bringing disillusionment to the hearer. The treasure is not a Stradivarius, not a Guaranius, not an Amati—not any one of the score or more of famous makes that its owner may have thought it was.

Many Deceived Victims.

In no other field, perhaps, is human ignorance and gullibility so greatly taken advantage of as in this. Hardly a week passes but some one comes in hugging a case under his arm, waiting to be told that he is the possessor of a highly valuable instrument, and hearing only the bitter news that he has been "done in," either by an unscrupulous dealer or by his own overactive imagination. People who show rare shrewdness in business and social life often lost all sense of value when it comes to the purchase of a violin. America at the present time is showing a keen interest in music and musicians. Like the patrons of old, many rich individuals, some with money but newly acquired, are taking under their wings promising young violinists in whose career they find vicarious musical expression. It is these who become the easiest prey of the dealer with a "rare old Stradivarius."

MRS. LANGTRY, THE JERSEY LILY TELLS SOME REMINISCENCES

(From John O'London's Weekly.) Just now Scotland and its climate is of special interest to a large number of visitors. According to Lillie Langtry (Lady De Bathe) in her reminiscences, "The Days I Knew," (Hutchinson, 24s), "there is no place like Scotland to bring roses to a woman's cheeks. Probably the excess of moisture is good for the skin, and it does rain there continually. One day, in a determined drizzle, a gillie observed casually, 'It's a fine day.' Another day, when it poured cats and dogs, he said, 'It's a soft morning,' and that is the utmost a Scot will admit about the humid climate. But with the sensible tweed costume and deer-stalking cap which women affect while in the Highlands, one can defy even a 'soft morning.'

A Story of Napoleon.

In this book Lillie Langtry tells a story about Napoleon III which has a pathetically prophetic ending. The incident occurred at the breaking-out of hostilities in the Franco-Prussian war:

"One day Napoleon, passing the apartments of Eugenie noticed with her a well-known jeweller and designer from one of the big houses of the Rue de al Paix, who had brought to the palace a collection of gems which the Empress had expressed a desire to see. Napoleon entered the room, gazed admiringly at the jewels for a few minutes, and then said to the man:

"They tell me you are one of the most famous designers in the world."

"You honor me, sire," was the reply.

"I have heard," continued Napoleon, "that you can transform the most insignificant object into a thing of artistic beauty."

"Again you honor me, sire," returned the man.

"Let me see," went on Napoleon, plucking a single hair from his head and offering it to the tradesman, "what you can do with that."

Don't Squeeze Black-Heads—Dissolve Them

Squeezing and pinching out blackheads make the pores large and cause irritation. Blackheads are caused by accumulations of dust and dirt and secretions from the skin, and there is only one safe and sure way and one that never fails to get rid of them—a simple way, too—that is to dissolve them. Just get from any drug store about two ounces of peroxide powder—sprinkle a little on a hot, wet cloth—rub over the blackheads briskly for a few seconds—wash off, and you'll be surprised to see that every blackhead has disappeared, and the skin will be left soft and the pores in their natural condition.

SOME UNUSUAL BITS OF NEWS WHICH ARE TRUE

New York—Modern civilization is wearing down our nerve centers, in the opinion of Sir James Prives Stewart, eminent English neurologist who came here on the way to a case in Montreal; primitive man could not dwell in our cities.

Take it from Miss Laura Kreutz Austrian, who has photographed wild animals on the island of Bali, somewhere east and south of Suez, the jungles are safer than Broadway. She was hurt in a motor accident 20 minutes after arriving in New York.

London—The Zulus could run 80 miles a day before contamination by contact with white men caused them to cease to be the most athletic and healthy people in the world, says Sir W. Arbuthnot Lane, surgeon.

New York—Fellow was in such a hurry to meet his family returning from Europe that he offered J. P. O'Connor, customs official, a $500 tip to let him pass a barrier at a liner. O'Connor refused the tip and let the worried paterfamilias by anyway.

Lynn, Mass.—Schoolteachers must give up either cigarettes or their jobs if Mayor Bauer has his way.

Basle—The "Hindenburg" crop is the rage among girls. It is the latest thing in coiffures; as much like a man's close cut as possible; front trimmed way down, neck shaved and everything.

Berlin—Two mothers in a swimming race across the English channel? Frau Ernst Vierkoetter, whose husband beat Trudie, is willing to race Miss Ederle next year, and presumably Mrs. Corson also, but she can't leave baby now. Fraulein Vierkoetter is being raised in a bathing suit; swims in the bath tub every morning.

Waretown, N. J.—Blind girls at summer camp are now able to swim a mile and a half. Prior to Trudie's feat the best they did was a 100 yds.

New York—Anna Fitzid, whose notes delight Chicago opera goers, is back from France with a black cat and most of the $34,000 that the feline helped her to win. Anna was out some $14,000 at Vichy's equivalent for the Sam Maddock's place of Edna Ferbers book, until she fed a hungry stray cat and took it to the casino with her. Then luck came her way so fast that she was offered 50,000 francs for the cat.

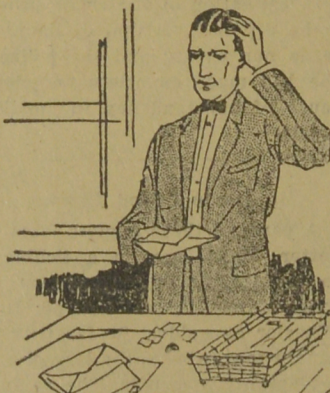

Berlin—When Germany at last joins the League of Nations a woman will help in the ceremonies. Gertrude Baeumer of the reichstag, will be a member of the delegation.

Detroit—If you prefer a flivver you must continue to do a lot of work with the feet in running. Word comes that no changes are contemplated such as hand gear shifts.

Schnectady, N. Y.—The country's greatest turbine generator is to be built here to supply greater Chicago. Consuming two tons of coal a minute, it will make electricity that could drive 160 New York-Chicago trains at once.

Mineola, N. L.—Helicopter tested here has risen five feet in the air, stopped and moved forward four miles an hour.

BLUNDERS

WHY IS THIS WRONG?

It is unwise to guess the weight of a letter to determine the amount of postage required. Such guessing often results in "Postage Due," which may cause delay in delivery, and, in the case of business letters often results in a dissatisfied customer.
