MEN HIGHER UP MAY BE INVOLVED IN LIQUOR SMUGGLING CASE IN COUNTY OF WESTMORLAND

(Moncton Transcript.)

Hints that men "higher up" than any mentioned in connection with the liquor seizures made here on Saturday and Monday by the customs officers and New Brunswick prohibition enforcement officials, might be involved as the case proceeded were made today by T. T. Goodwin, who is acting for the prosecution in both cases.

"It's not everybody who has the money to put up for such a quantity of liquor. And there was a good many drinks in that lot," Mr. Goodwin said.

When it was suggested that a well-known magazine had stated that $1.25 a gallon was all that was paid for alcohol at the three-mile limit, he added that it would cost a great deal more than that before it reached the country, inside that line. Some one must have put up the cash.

One to Seven Years.

A sentence of from one to seven years with no option of a fine faces Samuel Jones for having on his property the liquor which was seized on Monday afternoon, if the customs department proves that it was smuggled. A change made in the act last year increased the maximum penalty from one year.

$2,000 Bail.

Jones is at present out on bail of $2,000, which was granted at yesterday afternoon's session of the police court where the preliminary hearing is being held before Judge C. A. Steeves. He put up $1,000 himself, W. F. Lane and David Cohen each gave surety for $500.

During the afternoon, evidence corroborating that of Joseph Girouard chief customs officer in this city, was given by Murray Steeves, who was present when the liquor was found in a room adjoining the kitchen in the Jones home and removed to the customs department premises. The case was adjourned until Friday morning, after considerable argument by counsel for the defense, C. F. G. Bridges and W. Frederick Lane, and the prosecution, represented by T. T. Goodwin.

Mr. Goodwin asked that a substantial sum be set as bail in view of the nature of the offense and the heavy penalties attached to it.

Still at Large.

Isaac Bourgeois, in whose barn approximately 2,000 gallons of alcohol and 21 cases of gin were found on Saturday afternoon, still is at large, Mr. Goodwin, who is representing the department in this case as well, said today. He had no information for publication.

Bourgeois was not in evidence when the seizure was made and it is reported that he was taken away in a motor car by one of the owners of the liquor, who believed in this way that he would be able to escape without becoming involved. A penalty similar to that which may be inflicted on Jones should he be found guilty faces Bourgeois, as well, if it is proved that the liquor which was in his barn was smuggled into the country contrary to the provisions of the customs regulations.

Nothing to Say.

Mr. Goodwin had nothing to say concerning the Jones case, either, except that the department was making every effort to prove its case.

The Weak Link.

No chain is stronger than its weakest link, is the saying and according to reliable information obtained by a Transcript reporter regarding the landing of illicit liquor in the Petitcodiac river areas it was a weak link from the smugglers' point of view that resulted in the seizure near Fox Creek on Saturday.

The liquor was landed, it is said, at the Gautreau wharf which was built a comparatively few years ago, about 11 o'clock last Tuesday night. The wharf is about three-quarters of a mile from the main road and the by-road leading to it was sodden with the spring rains, making travel over it, after one or two cars had passed, almost impossible.

Plans Go Awry.

According to the story, the scow, which had been loaded off Quaco Head, docked as the schedule called for but some one had partaken too liberally of the cargo and threatened to notify the officers if a further slice of the profits was not given him.

The owners of the liquor at this time became alarmed and took all the cargo off the boat instead of only a part as they had planned. It had been their intention to take only a part of it out of the boat, place it in cars and remove it to Moncton or whatever its destination might have been. The craft was then to go down river with the tide, anchor in the bay and return the following night to have some more removed, and this was to continue until all was disposed of to the satisfaction of the owners and without arousing the suspicions of the people or the officers with any unusual movement of cars.

Had to Use Horses.

This plan abandoned, some place had to be found for the liquor, and it was stored in barns, vacant houses—of which there are several in the district—and also in a church which has not been in use for some years. But the trouble was getting it there from the wharf. An attempt was made to use cars, but the road was cut up rapidly and several of the machines were stalled. Horses from the neighborhood were hired to pull the cars out, and it is said that the owners were paid twenty dollars each to remain the rest of the night to carry the liquor. They stayed and, the information continues, several of the bags in which the liquor was being transported broke and the corks were removed from the bottles. Many made merry.

Road Was Cut Up.

With the passage of the cars along the main road to Moncton it too became cut up and telephone calls were sent into Moncton complaining of its condition. The patrolmen were notified and on Saturday they were doing their best to repair the damage.

Some of the liquor had been removed at that time from cellars and houses barns and the church, but the barn belonging to Isaac Bourgeois and another to a man living not far away, still had their stock.

The inspectors went down, but on the way they were passed by one of the owners, or reputed owners, of the liquor who called workmen from the road where they were working and told them to get away as quickly as possible and to stay away. They went.

Find Liquor.

The officers arrived and they went to the barn. They found on the floor the alcohol in drums and the gin in green cases, and searched about looking for more. They went to another barn and came back. They stood guard over what they had found.

On their way to the scene of their find they had passed another barn inside of which a motor truck was standing ready to transport the liquor to Moncton. The barn doors were closed, but within a very few minutes after the officers were past the place these doors were flung open and the car disappeared in the direction of the Nova Scotia border.

Many cases of liquor still remained in the barn, however, and they are reported to have been much more valuable than those which were seized, being for the most part high grade whiskies and other liquors.

To the Woods.

During the night, while the officers were busy overseeing the transportation of the liquor from Isaac Bourgeois' barn to the city where it was stored in the customs house under guard, many of the inhabitants at Gautreau were employed in carrying bags of liquor from the barn to the woods which are nearby and from there it was taken, for the most part, by the owners to its destined resting place. For the most part it was taken. A case of two disappeared now and then and one of them is said to have been hidden underneath the school house there. It was found by boys of the district and they tried to dispose of it for a dollar a bottle.

LOAM.

There is a fascination in plowed loam

Before a single green shoot takes the morn

Whether it be of plentiful grain the home

Or germinate the sprouts of golden corn

If it be glowing amber or dull gray Still will it be potential of rich things

After the spring has come its wooing way

Or autumn touched it with its winnowing wings

Harvest the loam means, be it brown and bare;

Harvest the loam means ere the season end;

For each his moiety, for each his share;

To every man the fertile loam is friend.

Loved be the loam! It is our source we know;

To its warm breast at last we all must go.

SOME POINTERS ON FISHING WITH A FLY

Mr. Arthur P. Silver in his excellent and charming book on Maritime Canada says of fly fishing in the opening days of the season: In the early part of the year the sea-trout—especially in tidal waters, prefer gaudy flies such as the red hackle and scarlet ffbis, or a bright claret body with white wings. A distinction must be made in the size and color of flies for use in the rough rapids or in the dark pools covered, as is often, the case, for an inch or two with creamy or snow-white flakes of foam, also between those tied for the dark water of some streams which have their source from lakes encumbered with beds of black mud from which shoots upward a rank growth of water plants, and those which issue from clear mountain springs.

The same flies are not equally effective on dark days, or when the wind ripples the water and when the sun shines bright and clear. During the fishing season there are apt to be far fewer cloudy days than bright ones. Frequently the sun rises day after day in unclouded splendor. There are many trout pools, however, where precipitous cliffs shade the waters so as to admit of a couple of hours good fishing both in the early and late hours of the day. Were the angler compelled to confine himself to one fly for both bright and dark days, clear water and turgid he could not do better than select the Parmacheene Belle, which is irresistible at almost all times to a feeding trout. Many very successful sportsmen limit their range of seatrout, flies to bodies of claret, yellow or orange, with wings of turkey, drake teal or woodcock and white of the Jungle fowl.

INJUNCTION AGAINST BOOK ON ORANGEISM

Kingston, Ont., May 26—Chief Justice Meredith today made the interlocutory injunction against publication of a book entitled "Orangeism Unfolded," by Fred Sexsmith, Napanee, a perpetual injunction, granting the claim of the Grand Orange Lodge of British America.

He also ruled that Sexsmith must pay the costs of the action.

No evidence was heard in the case, though A. B. Cunningham, K. C., counsel for the Orange Lodge, put in several questions and answers taken from the examination of Sexsmith, in which the plaintiff had admitted taking an oath to keep secret what he learned in the society.

Ambrose Shea, counsel for the plaintiff, contended that the defendants must show damage or injury before an injunction could be granted, but Chief Justice Meredith ruled that Sexsmith, by taking an oath, had entered into a contract with the Orange order and by endeavoring to publish the book, was trying to break that contract.

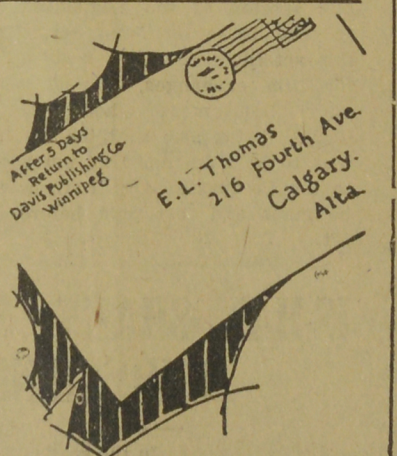

We're told a stitch in time saves nine.

The test involves a moral. Such stitches must be mighty fine. At patching up a quarrel.

Patient—Is this the medicine for my ague, doctor?

Physician—Yes; shake well before using.

BLUNDERS

WHY IS THIS WRONG?

Thousands of letters are delayed in delivery from two to ten hours in big cities because business men do not place their return street address on letterheads and envelopes. Even though a company may be an important one, all postal employees do not have its address committed to memory. Consequently its mail will surely be delayed if persons who must reply to its letters are given no street address.
