NATIVE TOWNEAGER FOR ALL NEWS ABOUT AIMEE'S TRIAL; REMEMBERS HER AS BIT OF FLIRT

Ingersoll, Ont.—Next to Los Angeles, Cal., this little town, with its trim old farmhouses and its "little white school house," is probably the most excited town in the world over the Aimee Semple McPherson case.

It was here that the famous evangelist, now facing charges of obstructing justice in Los Angeles as a result of her disappearance, and her dramatic reappearance accompanied by its story of alleged kidnapping, was born.

She attended the two-story white schoolhouse of Ingersoll, was a student in the collegiate school here, and lived in Ingersoll or vicinity until she was 17 years old. Then she married Robert Semple, a youth of 22, who conducted the Penetecostal mission, and finally went to China with him, where he died.

All Remember Her.

Although it has been many years since Mrs. McPherson was in Ingersoll, the people remember her well. They sit in the village stores and talk of her; a town taxi driver was her schoolmate; across the road from the farm where she was born still lives a man who remembers her birth and her marriage as well.

They describe Aimee as perhaps a little livelier than most of the village girls, on the one hand, and on the other a magnetic person who, even in youth, could sway audiences; whose life was dedicated to the service of Christianity by her mother; and who may have flirted a bit with the train crew down at the station but who could quote endless verses of the scripture and who always introduced the visiting officials of the Salvation Army when they came to conduct their public meetings.

Fond of Animals.

Outstanding in Aimee's characteristics as a girl, these old neighbors said, was her fondness for the influence over animals.

While other little girls were playing with their dolls, Aimee used to herd together the cows and chickens in the barnyard and "hold meetings," Mrs. Ezra Cable, kindly worker of the Salvation Army, said.

"She would take her Bible out into the yard, get a box for a pulpit, gather all the dogs, cats, chickens, cows and other farm animals she could get and read her Bible to them," Mrs. Cable said.

"She was a great Bible student, and when I first saw her as a little child of 4 she could stand up and recite all the books of the Bible.

Red Hair Puzzles.

"She had fair, almost golden hair. It was beautiful hair, even then, and very heavy. Her face was rather round she had hazel eyes and fair complexion. She was a chunky sort of a child and grew up to be an unusually well built woman."

The question of the color of her hair interested the people here.

"She had fair hair when I knew her," said George Mitchell, taxi driver "but the newspapers now say her hair is red. How it could have changed is what puzzles me."

Fine Athlete.

Mrs. Cable said that when Aimee was a baby her father would rock her in a cradle swung on a line beneath a tree and that even then she showed great interest in nature. As she grew older she became the authority among the girls of her age on the names of plants, birds and flowers.

"Aimee always would be the first to see a woodchuck," said Mrs. Cable. While attending the collegiate school here Miss Kennedy—for that was her name then—became known for her prowess as a swimmer and an athlete.

"She could hold her own with any of the boys especially on the bars, the rings and the other gymnasium apparatus," Mrs. Cable said.

Picked Own Religion.

"But best of all she like acting. She seized every opportunity to get up and recite in meetings. She was a great debater and always took the temperance side of questions."

It was while she was still a girl here that she expressed dissatisfaction with existing forms of religion, Mrs. Cable said, and finally Aimee's mother took her to all churches in the community to permit her to select a form of worship to her liking.

In 1907, she said, the Pentecostal mission opened in Ingersoll and there Miss Kennedy found a religion which seemed to fill her needs.

She spent her spare time there, attended all meetings and finally married Robert Semple, the youthful conductor of the mission.

Called Flirt.

A cousin of Mrs. McPherson was less kindly in her stories of the evangelist's girlhood, although she credited her with unusual intelligence.

"We used to hear stories of her flirting and carrying on, and one time down at the depot my daughter-in-law called me out to see the way Aimee was carrying on with the train crew," she said. "That was too much, and I said to her the next time she came to my house!"

"Aimee, I don't want you to come over any more unless you behave yourself."

James Piper, who lived in the farmhouse across the road from the Kennedy farm where Aimee was born and recalled her from birth until she was married, said that when the stories first came from Los Angeles that Mrs. McPherson had been drowned while swimming, he didn't believe them.

Always Finished Task.

"She was too good a swimmer," he said.

"She set her mind on adventure when a girl," he said. "I remember one time coming home from town and seeing her and another girl sitting on top of that big barn over there," and he pointed across the road to the Kennedy barn.

"She used to talk about going to China as a missionary."

"She used to go around getting votes in a newspaper popularity contest, and she got more votes, I think, than any of the others. If she started anything she went through with it—she was that kind of a girl."

A Mr. Quinn, who lived a little way down the road, remember Mrs. McPherson most kindly.

Home Now Shrine.

"She gave me my first pair of skates and she used to pull me around in a sled," he said.

People here are somewhat divided as to their support of Mrs. McPherson. It would seem the majority regard her kindly, but a few are outspoken in their criticism.

But whatever the local sentiment, the Kennedy home, where Aimee spent her childhood, has become a veritable shrine, not only for the people of nearby places, but for travelers from far away. The old frame houses, sitting beside the gravelled road, center of a 63-acre farm, and shaded by tall poplars, is visited almost daily by persons to whom Mrs. McPherson has ministered.

A few days ago a man came from California and was directed to the Kennedy farm. He approached it with reverence, and finally asked the present tenants to permit him to step within the door.

"I wish to say I have crossed the threshold of the house in which Mrs. McPherson was born," he said.

Sour Stomach

"Phillips Milk of Magnesia"
Better than Soda

Instead of soda hereafter take a little "Phillips Milk of Magnesia" in water any time for indigestion or sour, acid, gassy stomach, and relief will come instantly.

For fifty years genuine "Phillips Milk of Magnesia" has been prescribed by physicians because it overcomes three times as much acid in the stomach as a saturated solution of bicarbonate of soda, leaving the stomach sweet and free from all gases. It neutralizes acid fermentations in the bowels and gently urges the souring waste from the system without purging. Besides, it is more pleasant to take than soda. Insist upon "Phillips." PLAN CONTEST TO SELECT THE HANDSOMEST MAN

Admore, Pa., Oct. 18—The girls of Admore are going to hold a beauty contest to select the handsomest man.

The World-Wide Guild, an organization of young women, will have the contest at the Admore Women's Club, Nov. 5.

"There is entirely too much fuss made over the women," the Guild said in an announcement.

"We give the men credit for the many remarkable things they discover and accomplish, so why not give them a chance to show off their good looks, their broad, square shoulders, their tapering waists, their strong, sinewy muscles the firm curve of their cheeks and the fire of their eyes? Their rights will be recognized at last."

The rules for entrants are wide. The age limit is 18 to 60; weight, 130 to 200 pounds; height, 5 feet to 5 feet 3; waist measure, 25 to 50 inches; costumes, furnish your own.

Mr. Giles once lent a volume of Plato to one of his neighbors and when the book was returned asked: "Well how did you like Plato?"

"First-rate," said the neighbor: "I see he's got some of my ideas."

Sure Way to Get Rid of Blackheads

There is one simple, safe, and sure way that never fails to get rid of blackheads: that is to dissolve them. To do this, get two ounces of peroxide powder from any drug store—sprinkle a little on a hot, wet cloth—rub over the blackheads briskly—wash the parts and you will be surprised how the blackheads have disappeared. Big blackheads, little blackheads, no matter where they are, simply dissolve and disappear. Blackheads are a mixture of dust and dirt and secretions that form in the pores of the skin. The peroxide powder and the water dissolve the blackheads so they wash right out, leaving the pores free and clean and in their natural condition.
