Alaska The New Playground

ALASKA is an Indian word meaning "The Great Country," an interpretation so adequately descriptive of its charms that it receives the unanimous approval of all tourists who visit Alaska though they may substitute an accentuated "Some" for "The Great." The oil-burning steamships of the Canadian National Railways playing up and down the Inside Passage off the British Columbia coast have brought Alaska very close to Vancouver and Prince Rupert and therefore within the means and time of the army of tourists and holiday makers who visit the Pacific slope of Canada in the summer time. It is the new playground of the Pacific.

Once Alaska was identified with the gold seeker. Today it is as closely linked with tourist traffic, for men have found that there is more sheer gold in one Alaskan sunset than ever came out of its rock-bound mines. It is a land of strange contradictions and of never-ending surprises. Flowers bloom at the heel of glaciers as large as some European principalities. The primitive totem pole of the Indian stands next door to a building which is a monument to modern architecture. The pack trail of yesterday is the motor road of today.

On the left of the photograph is seen one of Alaska's famous totem poles. It is that of the Raven, the creator of man and the hat which surmounts the totem is that which the Raven saw in the creator's house. The bottom figure is Hi-yi-shon-a-gu, the Indian Atlas who holds up the earth. Thousands of totems as curious and as interesting are to be seen in Alaska.

The log cabin at the top is claimed to be that which was occupied by the famous Sam McGee, immortalized by Robert W. Service. Beside it is a pan of gold washed from the creeks of the Yukon which borders on Alaska. The gold in the pan was said to be worth $10,000.

The large picture is a view of Skagway, the home port in Alaska of the Canadian National steamships and the gateway to the famous White Horse Pass of the Yukon as well as to many beauty spots that are without a rival on the continent.

MAN RENOUNCED A FORTUNE OF A MILLION DOLLARS FOR THE SAKE OF HIS CONSCIENCE

How many men would sacrifice a million and a quarter pounds for a principle?

One who has done so is Mr. F. N. Charrington, the missionary, with whom I spent a morning recently, writes the Tit-Bits man.

He is now seventy-five years of age, and for half a century he has been working hard in the East-end of London. He is a member of the Charrington family, who are among the most prominent of our brewers, but is himself a sworn enemy of the trade. He told me in simple words what caused him to renounce his immense fortune.

"One day outside a public-house in the East-end I came upon a poor woman pleading with her husband for money to buy food for her babies. Without a word the ruffian knocked the wife and children into the gutter. Sick with horror, I glanced up and saw my own name emblazoned in gold above the building. The blow that man dealt his wife served also to knock me out of the liquor trade."

He resigned his heirloom and took a tiny house in the poorest part of the east-end. There, with a table, one chair, and two packing-cases for furniture, he began a life of Spartan simplicity—this after life at an excellent school and all the luxuries of a richly-appointed home.

In his sitting-room at the Great Assembly Hall in Mile End Road, where for nearly nineteen thousand nights he has carried on his work, many relics bear witness to exciting passages in a career that teems with drama.

One of them is a poker that hangs beside the gas-fire. This was the instrument with which a man intended to murder his wife. He was carrying it up his sleeve when he dropped it out of the cold to hear Mr. Charrington speak. At the close of the meeting the man confessed his intention, surrendered his weapon, and promised to reform.

Beside the window there is a sinister-looking chopper. This, too, has a story. One night, very late, Mr. Charrington was walking in a condemned slum area, when he noticed a crowd in front of a small house from whose uncurtained windows the light streamed out into the dark street. Inside, a man, intoxicated, was wielding a chair over his wife's head. The chair missed its victim but overturned a lamp on the table, leaving the room in darkness save for the red gleam of the man's cigarette.

At 2.30 a. m. the crowd was electrified by a whisper that the man had secured an axe for his wife's head and a hammer for anyone who interfered. Whereupon Mr. Charrington who had enlisted a detective to stand at the doorway with a torch, entered the room, armed only with an umbrella.

Kicking the axe underneath a chair, he upbraided the drunkard for keeping the street awake. Then seizing his man, the missionary propelled him backwards through the passage and hurled him down a short flight of stairs into the backyard. The man, stunned but sobered, fled over the wall and spent the next two nights in Epping Forest. The axe was retained by Mr. Charrington as a memento.

Intending suicides sometimes visit the Great Assembly Hall. One young man called and, despite all efforts to dissuade him, seemed determined on self destruction.

Mr. Charrington said: "Ah, well my boy, so this is your last night in the Mile End Road? Dear me, and the chemists are all closed. I do hope you have the poison with you."

As he had expected, the man's hand went instinctively to the pocket where the poison was carried. Immediately Mr. Charrington leaped at him, and after a determined struggle secured the poison. A friendly talk followed and the young man was found a job. The bottle of poison is another specimen in the missionary's collection.

At a time when music-halls were not the well-conducted places of amusement that they are today, Mr. Charrington made a practice of distributing leaflets against the immoral purposes for which such places were sometimes used.

One night six men in evening dress rode out from the West-end in cabs with the avowed intention of murdering him. They were intoxicated, and would have carried their threats into effect but for the surprising intervention of two or three women who surrounded him, and by the use of threats couched in lurid language scared off the bullies.

In 1922 yet another murderous attack was made on Mr. Charrington as he was distributing leaflets one Sunday evening. His assailant was a puglist, obviously in the pay of others, who ran up to him, upper-cut him with a right and left in rapid succession, and then dealt him a blow over the heart.

When he was fighting the music halls, Mr. Charrington was imprisoned one night for preaching outside one. One of his fellow-prisoners said: "What are you in for?" "Oh, I'm in for a little affair in connection with —'s Music Hall," replied Mr. Charrington. "Well, I never," chuckled the other; "so am I. I pinched a 'am from the bar there—what did you take?"

Nothing but admiration can be felt for a man who will sacrifice an immense fortune, endure continual conflicts, and live his life for others in a determined effort to keep faith with his ideals.

Billy's father says that he can always tell when he returns from business in the evening whether Billy, aged five, has been behaving well or badly during the day. There's something in the youngster's manner that gives him away. The other evening daddy suspected that something had gone wrong during the day and he said:

"On my way home, son, a little bird hopped on my shoulder and whispered in my ear, and he said that you were not such a good boy today."

"Well, daddy," said Billy, "I guess that bird was no liar."

Her Face Was Covered With Large, Red Pimples

Miss Greta Carlisle, 23 Leonard St., Brantford, Ont., writes:—"A short while ago, my face was completely covered with large red pimples, and it seemed that it was almost impossible for me to get rid of them, as nothing I took seemed to do me any good.

One day I noticed an advertisement of and I will never regret the day I bought it, as, now, my face is entirely cleared up of blotches and pimples of every kind."
