ONTARIO JUDGE WOULD FLOG ALL BOOTLEGGERS

Port Arthur, March 5—"If I had the making of the law which I have not," said Mr. Justice Fisher, when addressing the members of the Grand Jury at the opening of the Spring Assizes this afternoon, "I would guarantee that no bootlegger would ever come back a second time. I would flog him, sentence him to a stiff term of imprisonment, and confiscate his property. The way things are now, a man is a bootlegger one day, his father a bootlegger the next day, and his mother the next."

Mr. Justice Fisher said that 75 per cent. of all crime that came before the courts today was due to drink. Most of the crimes were committed by foreigners, his Lordship declared from 70 to 75 per cent of whom were bootleggers. Those who were selling liquor, or having anything to do with stills or the handling of liquor illegally, were mostly foreigners, he said.

"If we Anglo-Saxons made up our minds to banish strong drink from our midst forever, most of the crime so prevalent today would be done away with," his Lordship observed.

Mr. Justice Fisher also remarked that the enforcement of the law, so far as bootleggers were concerned, had been very lax.

DEBATE IN PARLIAMENT ON CLOSURE RESOLUTION WAS EXCEEDINGLY LIVELY

cratic methods to defeat us.

"While they are whining and whistling, Canada is going ahead, going into a new period, not only to recovery, but to prosperity. All the statistics of trade and employment show it. We are going to carry on, Mr. Speaker. We are going to appeal to the best men, not to the worst—not to their hatreds or their passions, we are going to appeal to unity and harmony in this country, and we shall be sustained."

Mr. Meighen Speaks.

Applause equal to if not more vociferous than that accorded Mr. Le point by the Liberals greeted Right Hon. Arthur Meighen from his followers when he arose. From the Acting Leader of the Government, he said, he had just listened to a speech "undoubtedly prepared over a long period of time, the purport of which, so far as I can judge, was to crowd as many of the offenses which he charged against ourselves as could possibly be crowded into the space of 20 minutes."

"There is one element he distinctly omitted. While emphasizing the determination of his Government to carry on by force of its majority, he became very enthusiastic over the rule which he now invokes. Honorable members of the House who were in Parliament will remember that, of all gentlemen opposite who condemned this closure rule, its principle, its initiation, its application, condemned it day and night, the honorable member who has just spoken was most outspoken. He declared that the application of this rule was the gag and the disruption of a free Parliament."

Mr. Meighen declared his belief that the closure rule was essential in all free Parliaments. He had preached that doctrine in 1910, and would preach it now. But was there anything left for this Government now in office to swallow? Having previously made away with all its other principles, it now disposed of that last principle of unyielding opposition to the invocation of closure.

"What is to be thought," he asked, "of a Leader of the Government who is afraid to use the rule, sits calmly in his seat for days and weeks, then rises and complains that at last he is compelled to avail himself of the rule which is based on sound principle?"

"Series of Misrepresentations."

"My honorable friend rises and says they only called this Parliament for one purpose: to find out which party had the confidence of the House. Why then, did he put the whole series of misrepresentations into the mouth of his Excellency? My honorable friend knew if they came honestly before this House and stated the purpose of the session they could not get a majority. Honorable members knew that on their record of four years they could not get a majority in the House of Commons, and the Minister of Customs admitted it is one of the debates. The Minister of Customs, after all these blandishments had been held out by way of bribe and nothing else—held out entirely foreign to the purpose of calling Parliament, knowing they could not be sustained on their record, looked across to honorable gentlemen on my left, he said: 'If you vote on this resolution of confidence you don't vote support in our record.' By that expression a loophole was offered honorable gentlemen through which they could escape, and through which they could justify support of the Administration. By that move the Government gathered around it the support of the honorable gentlemen to my left, and not one will rise in his seat and say that for any other reason on earth he supported this Government at this time."

"Has this Government had a vote of confidence yet? On the statement of the Minister of Customs can any member of the Government dare say that this House has voted confidence in the Government to this day? Nobody talks. The Government is directing its efforts now to seeing that the House gets no opportunity to vote on a question of confidence. And the Government invokes what it declares to be the infamous closure rule to see that Parliament never gets an opportunity to vote confidence."

Mr. Bird Protests.

"In this they have the co-operation of certain honorable gentlemen to my left. In this they have the active co-operation of the member for Nelson (Mr. Bird). After resolutions expressing what we thought fundamental, this House was about to have presented, as every honorable member knew—"

Mr. Bird arose to protest and was greeted with vigorous Conservative shouts of "Sit down, sit down."

Mr. Bird—I wish to correct the right honorable gentleman. The member for Nelson didn't know any such thing.

Mr. Meighen—Didn't know what?

Mr. Bird—What the right honorable gentleman said.

Mr. Meighen—The right honorable gentleman hasn't said. He knows before I said it.

Closure for a Holiday.

"That was part of the co-operation. Through the press we had informed the country that a vote of want of confidence would be made and even the name of the mover was given. If they don't know if they must mean 'knock' in a sense never before understood in this Parliament. While my honorable friend (Mr. Cahon) stood there, my friend from Nelson (Mr. Bird) stood and forced himself upon the Speaker in order that the avowed purpose of the calling of Parliament might be defeated and frustrated and in order that the honorable gentlemen (Progressives) might not be put in the position of having to vote yes or no on a confidence motion. That is the debate that has been prolonged. We have appealed to the Government to bring some business before Parliament."

"The closure is all right, Mr. Speaker: perfectly justifiable, justified and necessary, but never in the history of any Parliament was closure ever adopted for the purpose of giving the member a holiday. What position is the Government in?"

Liberal voice—A good one.

Mr. Meighen—A good position! The Government is in a good position, just as a criminal—about to be electrocuted is in a good position when he takes the chair.

"Serious charges have been levelled against the Administration and are under review by a committee. Serious charges have been levelled across the floor in respect of malfeasance of office by the Administration. While those charges—one side of them—are under investigation by a committee, this Government forces closure through in order that the work of that committee may not be effective. This Parliament, at the instance of the Government, denudes that committee of all power to enforce its decisions, leaves it stranded and helpless and at the mercy of witnesses. Charges of defiance of Parliament have been levelled, supported by indisputable facts, supported by their own Orders-in-Council, defiance as brazen and illegal as anything perpetrated in any country in the world. And the Leader of the Government moves the closure in order to proceed with an adjournment in order that they may get on further with the projects which they have undertaken by means of illegal steps."

"Is this Parliament to sit down while the Government dips its hands into the Treasury for projects which Parliament has never authorized? Is closure to be applied in order that the command of Parliament over the money of the country shall no longer be effective? I want to know where the defenders of Parliament's rights are this afternoon."

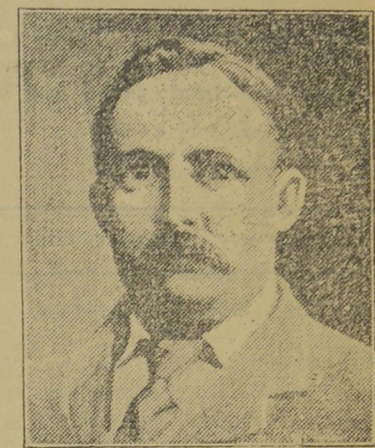

Rouyn Railway Mentioned.

Mr. Meighen specifically mentioned the Rouyn Railway agreement as one of the matters requiring Parliamentary consideration, and concluded that while the Government had appealed to keep the railways out of politics it had put politics into the railways.

"Closure for the purpose of an adjournment? Closure for the purpose of a holiday; for the purpose of divesting the most important committee that ever sat here in 20 years of its powers; closure for the purpose of shielding the Government from attack on account of as grave charges of defiance of Parliament as ever were levelled against an Administration—for these purposes closure is invoked this afternoon. The majority will rule over the minority—(Liberal cries of "Time, time,")—but the Government will pay the penalty."

'The trouble was in my right hip and shoulder; the pain almost unendurable. This kept up until I started to take 'Fruit-a-tives'. After a continuous treatment for about six months, I am now in first-class condition. This, I attribute to my persistent use of 'Fruit-a-tives'."

INVENTOR WINS SUIT FOR LARGE SUM

San Francisco, March 4—George Campbell Carson, copper miner and desert wanderer who has looked up at the stars many nights from a bed of sand for want of a better couch, was placed in a position by the United States circuit court here today to receive a fortune estimated at $20,000, 000 from the American Smelting & Refining Company for alleged infringement on a patent.

Every court into which Carson has brought suit has sustained him, the list including the United States supreme court. The company sought to try the case all over again on new grounds, but the circuit court said to day that the book of Carson's legal trumps was closed and that he should be given his due.

Fought For Nine Years.

The case concerned patented improvements in the side-charging of reverberatory furnaces used for smelting copper ores. The smelting companies adopted the process, Carson contended, without giving himself or his patent credit. He demanded satisfaction. They told him that they were using a process patented in Dollar Bay Mich., to which they had a right.

Carson carried on the fight for nine years without weapons or resources to begin with other than sincerity of speech and manner and a few blue prints and etchings. The United States district court of the state of Washington favored him with an imposing judgment. The circuit court upheld the district court. The supreme court upheld the circuit court. There are suits pending against other smelting companies, but the action which was decided was the key suit.

The court noted in conclusion:

"The ends of justice demand that the litigations should end here."

Carson, the wanderer with a possible $20,000,000 coming to him and his associates, can now get the perfect laboratory tools and retorts that he needs in his work. It is something that he has always wanted, he said, but he had to go ahead with the tools that others had thrown away, broken and worn out.

He has no plans for the future other than his laboratory. He says that he does not want the riches that the action demanded be given to him. He merely wants the satisfaction of letting the world know that he made a valuable and lasting contribution to the refinement of copper ore.

Where An American Hangs His Hat

Once a hat was not just a hat; it was also a badge of sectionalism. That was when the broad-brimmed Stetson and the nobby derby seldom met. When South, East, North, West lived differently, dressed differently, and thought differently. When a traveling American could feel like a stranger in his own land.

Before advertising—

But now Mrs. Green of Boston and Mrs. Brown of El Paso use the same vacuum cleaner, face powder, soap; Adams of Boston and Sims of Seattle are alike in the cut of their clothes. And where an American hangs his hat, within the borders of these United States, he feels at home. Advertising did that.

Advertising is still at work helping to make these states united. Here is a better bed, a handsomer shoe, a more delicious food. Let it be known from Maine to California, from Washington State to Florida! Here's a healthier way to live, another safeguard for your family, a new service of self-improvement.
