DEAUVILLE, FRANCE, ENJOYS A BRILLIANT SEASON; PEOPLE FROM ALL LANDS FLOCK THERE

(By Natalie De Borgory, in Chicago, News.)

Paris, France.—With the coming of September the eyes of the world center on Deauville, the beach where money and eccentricity abound. It is here that the celebrities from all parts of the world meet, each in pursuit of his or her favorite occupation, be it tennis, horse-racing, gambling or just merely attracting attention. This last has been cultivated to a fine art with the aid of the beautiful beach, where the slightest extravagance of either attire or behavior attracts a dense crowd of fashionable idlers as well as an army of moving picture men and photographers.

The day in Deauville starts late, for fashion has decreed that bathing take place between 11 and 1. This permits even those who stagger out of the Casino at 6 a. m. to reach at least the fashionable cafe on the boardwalk, known as the Potiniere, if not actually the ocean itself.

Clothes and Jewels Everywhere.

Here it is that the world meets in all stages of dress and undress. Women in one-piece bathing suits, cut low above and high below, turn deep brown under the blazing sun. Ancient princes of India, followed by meek-eyed wives wrapped in yards of gorgeous hand-woven materials and scintillating with priceless jewels, sit silently but persistently.

Here are Jules E. Mastbaum, the Philadelphia moving picture magnate, and Mrs. Mastbaum, with Miss Louise Groody of "No, No, Nanette" fame, sipping a cocktail and enjoying her first holiday in two years. She wears a bathing suit with a green snake effect and waterproof ostrich feather trimmings to her peignoir, the most recent of Deauville's sensations. So, Joel, the South African diamond king never misses his dip, for which he comes from his yacht, moored in the harbor between Deauville and Trouville, an ancient fishing town.

Lord and Lady Mountbatten, cousins to the King of England, are also moored aboard the Shrimp, but the Potiniere sees them daily. Mrs. G. Ogden Thorne of Chicago is here in all her blond daintiness, with a flowered pink chiffon dress and a parasol of fluttering pale pink and pastel blue ostrich feathers, another sensation on the beach. Mr. and Mrs. Berry Wall never miss the fashionable hour, and even Fannie Ward finds time to appear. The Dolly sisters are habitués both at the Potiniere and at the gambling tables, where they win and lose thousands.

One Awful Signboard.

In the afternoon there are races, held at the course outside the town, a beautiful flowered spot set against a background of wooded hills. There is just one distinguishing eyecore, and that is a stupendous liqueur sign, which soars above everything by its striking simplicity and clearness. This advertisement cannot be removed owing to an ironbound contract, which probably Henri Letellier, the millionaire mayor of Deauville, would like to break but cannot. For the reigning principle is beauty; flowered gardens abounding in brilliantly colored geraniums decorate the beach front and every private home.

Window boxes overflow with color, verandas sparkle red under the bright sun, the flowers are everywhere that a French gardener can find place. The best hotel, built in local style with dark beams and slanting roof, is a mass of geraniums, among which the porcelain animals, another local touch, look like real cats and birds. Deauville is known as the "plage fleurie," the flowered beach, and the name is well chosen.

The Casino of dazzling white stone, which catches the sun, is the center of all night life. An opera house satisfies music lovers, a moving picture contents movie fans. There is dancing in the big hall and at the Ambassadors, known as the highest priced restaurant in the world. Billy Arnold and his band of American boys provide dance music.

But the stream of smartly-dressed men and women disappears through a door. This is the unobtrusive entrance to the gambling rooms, to enter which one must be sinless. Cards are given only on presentation of a passport, and once this solemn ceremony performed, the attendants never forget your face.

Where Fortunes Disappear.

Three tremendous high rooms in white and gold, brilliantly illuminated by hanging cut glass candelabra, numerous green bascula tables, each marked with the minimum and maximum play at that particular table, and the most remarkable showing of gowns and jewels that the imagination can conjure. There is an actual sparkling of the diamonds worn by the women, strings of priceless pearls pass unnoticed, chinchilla coats that would keep a family of five for one year, ermine wraps and feminine beauty without end. The sunburnt skins bring out the priceless jewels. And yet, it is in these rooms that women count for least, for the gaming passion reigns supreme. One corner room is closed to the frailer sex, for it is here that men win and lose millions. The famous Greek syndicate, formed to gamble, lost one evening a cool 4,000,000 francs, but it is rumored that the losses have been more than covered since. The son of the powerful prince of Karputhala, one of the greatest Indian potentates, is seen here nightly, as well as the Aga Khan, the supreme head of the Mussulman world. He boasts one of the best racing stables in Europe.

Pawn Shops Kept Busy.

A deep silence reigns in this one room, where only the click of the chips and the disjointed words of the croupiers are heard. Losses and winnings often have to be piled into a waste-paper basket to make transportations possible.

Here people gamble away the last shreds of a small fortune feverishly hoping to make the big coup that will bring back what has been lost. Women bearing historic titles mingle with the demimonde, all bent on satisfying the consuming passion.

There may be fortunes won, but the flourishing pawn shops of Deauville are the mute evidence of the tragedy of those white and gold rooms. Toward morning, the smoke and the heavy perfumes thicken the air, lines of fatigue appear on the faces of the gamblers. But it is only the closing of the Casino which sends them home. And outside the glorious sun has risen on a world of flowers where all is peace and beauty.

DUKE MADE A BIG CATCH OF SALMON

The Duke of Westminster is reported to have made a new salmon fishing record by taking 22 fish, averaging 25 pounds, each from the Alta river, in Denmark, during one night.

"Fine catches are to be expected in Norway, says an authority of angling, but the Duke capture, of which I have heard, details yet, is a wonderful piece of fishing. Even in British Columbia or New Zealand, so far as I am aware it has not been beaten. The Wye, I think, holds the record for Britain. Captain de Winton, in 1913, secured 17 salmon averaging over 18 pounds, in one day from that river, and in 1922 the same number, about 15 pounds each, were caught on the Tay."

The previous salmon fishing record was held by General Trotter, who last year caught 29 in one night.

MANUCURE IS ADOPTED

Paris, Sept. 22.—The French Academy has decided to admit the word "manucure" into the French language. The word, though in general use, in that form, has not hitherto reached dictionary rank, and the six "immortals" present at the meeting (Marshal Joffre was one) spent some time discussing whether the English form "manicure" (which is also in use in France) should be adopted, but eventually agreed on "manucure" as being nearer the Latin original.

The word "manipulate" is to come up for discussion soon.

BOBBED HAIR STILL GOOD

Philadelphia, Sept. 22.—A bobbed-hair model yesterday won the styles creation contest at the annual convention of the National Hair Dressers' Association, indicating, delegates said, that the bob would continue to dominate milady's coiffure.

The winning model, exhibited by Evelyn Frederick, of New York, had blonde hair, cut into a shingle bob. A band of hair was added at the nape of the neck with a light cluster of curls over the left ear. She wore a single rose as an ornament and her hair was marcelled into a part.

"You can't sleep here sir."
"No, not unless you quit waking me every 10 minutes."
