The Senators, particularly the older ones, will have "a feast of reason and a flow of soul" in investigating these cases. No wonder so many would like to have a seat in the Upper House.

LONDON'S OLD SHOPS CARRY ON BUSINESS LIKE FOUNDERS DID

Although many long-established and independent business have been swallowed up by present-day amalgamations, and combines, there are still left in London, England, and its suburbs old firms that carry on their business such as the founders did, over a century and a half ago.

Blackwell & Co., for instance, have been making printers' ink since 1754, and the firm of Lewis Berger & Sons have been paint and color merchants since 1760. One sees their colors in the Turner rooms at the Tate Gallery, for the great landscape painter bought his pigments from the firm.

Twinnings, the tea merchants, have served tea to nine British sovereigns in succession. Thomas Twining started to sell tea in Devereaux Court, opposite the Law Courts, in 1700. Tom's Coffee House it was commonly called, and today has descendants carry on the business on the same site.

Davison, Newman & Co., started as grocers in the City of London in 1650. The firm's original sign of a crown and three sugar loaves hangs outside their present premises in Creechurch Lane. In their shop one may see the very counter over which the first pound of tea was sold to the public in England, and the old slave register of their coffee plantation in Jamaica. This firm despatched part of the tea that was sunk in Boston harbor, an act that led to the revolution which founded the United States.

The oldest "Segar" shop in London is said to be 146 Fleet Street. The house was built in 1667, the year after the Fire of London, but the tobacco and snuff business was not established until 1700 by Mr. Hoare. Since then it has changed hands only twice; the present owners are P. & S. Radford.

In this shop are snuff tubs polished by the clothes of many old customers who sat on them while their snuff was being mixed. Dr. Johnson used to call here on his way to the Cheshire Cheese. The tub on which he sat is pointed out to visitors.

Then there is Friarburg and Trevelyan's old shop in the Haymarket, where Georgian bucks and beaux bought their snuff. The Century Shop, at 100 Knightsbridge, another tobaccoist's, is said to be the oldest shop in this part of London. It was originally a farmhouse, and still possesses a garden.

Messrs. Fores, at the corner of Sackville Street, and Piccadilly, claims to be the oldest print shop in London. It has always been in the same family and was founded in 1783. The present proprietor's great-grandfather was a personal friend of Nelson, who often used to visit the shop.

Hatchard's book shop on the other side of Piccadilly is older still. In the shop hangs an oil painting of the founder, who established the business in the eighteenth century. It is probably that more distinguished and historical folk have foregathered in Hatchard's than in any other shop in London. Then in St. James' street among the great clubs still stands the quaint bow-fronted shop of Locke, the Hatter. In the firm's old books are the names of half the aristocracy.

Another long-established bookshop is Spencer's in New Oxford Street. Here, too, many famous men and women have called to inspect the stock.

At McMaster's print shop in Paton Street the customer may see the very table at which poor Francis Thompson, who had been reduced to selling matches in the gutter, sat when writing his great ode, "The Hound of Heaven."

As wine merchants, Hedges and

THE SWISS FISHERMAN.

The boy stood on the burning deck,
The breaking waves dashed high;
Should auld acquaintance be forgot
Cemin' through the rye?

Just a song at twilight
When the lights are low,
Under the spreading chestnut tree
When the corn and 'tatoes grow.

I've been workin' on de railroad
A de livelong day;
Oh, what fun it is to ride
In a one-horse open sleigh!

I am old, so old
I can write a letter;
Day by day, in every way
I'm getting better.

Smile the while
You kiss me sad adieu,
'Tis three o'clock in the morning
Because they all love you.

Breathes there a man with soul so dead
Who never to himself hath said:
Shoot if you must this old gray head
But give us this day our daily bread!

'Twas the night before Christmas
By the dawn's early light,
When o'er the deck the captain
shouted:
"Curfew shall not ring tonight!"

It was in a forest primeval
Where the old Flotilla lay
Carry me back to old Virginny
When you come to the end of a perfect day.

Sail on, O Ship of State
And let the rest of the world go by
And for bonny Annie Laurie
I'd lay me down and die.

When you and I were young, Maggie
When knighthood was in flower,
Hardly a man is now alive
Who remembers that famous hour.

Like a mighty army
Going on before,
I have a little shadow—
Quoth the raven: "Nevermore."

Somewhere a voice is calling
Everywhere I roam;
Ever since the day Sally went away
There's no place like home.
—Yale Record.

"You ought always to lend a helping hand to a friend."
"I try to," answered Senator Sorghum, wearily; "but, there aren't enough government jobs to go round."

Butler have existed since 1667. Thus this business has been in the same family for 258 years. There is a clause in their lease forbidding snip-shooting on Sundays. Another memory-haunted shop is Berry's in St. James' street. In this house, it is said Sir Walter Raleigh stored his first consignment of tobacco. Parts of the building go back to Tudor times.

Barry's atrens in the old days used to have themselves weighed in the great scales originally used for coffee bags, and there are carefully preserved records in many heavy volumes. The list covers princes, noblemen, soldiers, literary men—a vast variety. Charles Lamb's weight was recorded in 1814 at 129 1/2 pounds.

Mr. Mathuen now keeps an antique shop in the stableyard of the ancient George Inn in Church street, Kensington. There one may see Dick Turpin's hiding-place behind one of the old horse stalls. You can buy a piece of pacobeau furniture today where Black Boss munched corn.

Verrey's is one of the oldest restaurants in London, but is now rebuilt a few doors away from its old home at 229 Regent street. Here Dickens and Thackeray might often have been seen, and Alfred Tennyson had his favorite chair in which he sat smoking a long churchwarden pipe.

She Could Hardly Do Her Housework Nerves Were So Bad

Mrs. I. M. Parks, Consecor, Ont., writes: "I had heart and nerve trouble, and became so short of breath I could hardly do my daily housework, and was so nervous I could not think of staying alone, as every little sound I heard felt like a shock to me."
