A BOOK ON NOTABLES MAKES LONDONERS GASP; THE NAME OF THE AUTHOR IS NOT KNOWN

London, Nov. 20.—Woodrow Wilson, Lady Astor, Walter Hines Page and Mark Twain figure, with European monarchs, statesmen and other world-famous celebrities, in "The Whispering Gallery," a book by an unnamed author, which, published today, is the sensation of the hour here, and is inspiring the question, "What wrote it?" from thousand of readers who are chuckling with glee, gasping with amazement or quivering with anger as they peruse its pages.

This afternoon, its publishers, the John Lane Company, issued a statement that a clause was expressly inserted in the prepublication agreement with the mysterious author that his name was to be divulged only to one director of the firm and absolutely to nobody else.

Selling Like "Hot Cakes."

Though five Cabinet Ministers, Lords Oxford and Asquith, Lord Balfour, Lord Reading, Lord Cecil and Winston Churchill, have denied statements attributed to them in the book and though its astoundingly frank statements concerning other famous figures of the present age are arousing furious denunciation in some quarters here, the publishers announce that they have no intention of withdrawing it. The volume is selling like "hot cakes" and excerpts from it are filling entire columns in the newspapers.

It is providing the main topic of conversation throughout London, where all sorts of guesses on the author's identity are being hazarded. He describes himself as a diplomat whose name is a household word in diplomatic circles, though not so well known to the general public. The amazing thing about his book is that it quotes again and again conversations between the author and the celebrities it mentions, including President Wilson, Kaiser, Wilhelm, King Edward the Seventh, Emperor Francis Joseph, Cecil Rhodes and Lord Northcliffe. In fact, if the author is to be believed, a small army of the world's most famous men talked intimately to him on the gravest questions of international politics.

Author Genuine, Publishers Say.

Further describing the remarkable circumstances under which the volume now amazing and scandalizing London came to be published, the directors of the John Lane Company said in their statement:

"We took every possible precaution to satisfy ourselves that 'The Whispering Gallery' was a genuine work by a man who held the position which the author claims to have held, that of a diplomat, presumably retired. The book seems to us to ring true and we still honestly believe it was written by a man in a position to tell of the people and matters of which he has written. We do not believe the author could have written the book unless he had lived in the circles in which he claims, in his preface, to have moved."

B. W. Willett, Chairman of the John Lane Company, said this afternoon that if the book is a fake it is the biggest bit of cheek he ever came across.

Author's Opinion of Celebrities.

Here are some samples of the thumbnail sketches of celebrities which abound in the book:

Woodrow Wilson "quickly converted by storm and stress into weak-kneed bully. He mustn't be judged too harshly for being utterly unfit to grapple with the political brigands on whose side, to his utter consternation he found himself."

Walter Hines Page—"I shouldn't think a single human being in Christendom said less that he would wish to recant from 1914 to 1918 than Walter H. Page."

Lady Astor—"She is a strange mixture of humility and pride. She has two mottoes, 'sic vos non vobis,' which of course, applies to the lower orders, and 'nemo me impune lacessit,' which applies to herself."

Kaiser Wilhelm—"The one thing that he was accused of throughout the war was the one thing every single person who had ever met him knew to be false. He was not and never could be a Machiavelli. To put it bluntly, he was too much of a fool to be one."

Czar Nicholas—"Wilhelm was the sort of a boy who puts out his tongue in public, whereas Nicholas was sort who pulls off the legs of flies in private. Nicholas was a cad, a coward, a butcher and a black-guard."

Mussolini—"He is one mass of poses, all of which have become so much a part of himself that a poseless Mussolini would not be almost an affection. In England he couldn't exist for ten minutes, because his tricks, mannerisms and posturing would expose him to endless merriment."

H. G. Wells—"He would give his head to be an commanding influence in the world of action, and he witness inwardly at the destiny that condemns him to the impotence of the inkpot. This accounts for his childish attacks on such big historical figures as Napoleon, Caesar, &c. He envies their halo of heroism. He is the victim of an inferiority complex."

Thomas Hardy—"He is the high-brows' hero, yet he has managed to survive it."

Quotes Conversations with Wilson. This anonymous author also quotes scores of ultrafrank remarks which he says celebrities made about each other—frequently in intimate discourse with himself.

Wilson, he says, thus described Lloyd George to him in the privacy of the Presidential sanctum before he met the British statesman:

"I doubt if I would like Lloyd George. He has a way of appealing to the emotions and not to the intellect, which I distrust."

Of Clemenceau, Wilson is quoted as saying:

"He is a man who cannot see further than the frontiers of France. He can see them very distinctly to north and south and west but his sight is misty when he looks toward the east, due no doubt to the haze that hangs over the Rhine."

The unnamed author has much to say of King Edward VII., with whom he claims to have been on terms of considerable intimacy. This monarch, who, according to Lord Northcliffe as "the greatest monarch we've ever had—on a race course," is said in pre-war days to have held a long conversation with his nephew, Kaiser Wilhelm, and succeeded in causing Wilhelm to disclose his plans for world domination, which included the Germanizing of all America.

The writer, who hides under the cloak of anonymity, asserts he was present at some of the world's most important war councils, where, if he is to be believed, he hobnobbed on the most familiar terms with Lloyd George, Asquith, Grey, Cecil and other luminaries.

Some of the statements he attributes to these personages have been promptly denied by some of the statesmen said to have been present.

Of the great men whom he met during those stirring days, the author remarks: "With very few exceptions, I found them personally charming but politically deplorable."

It is impossible within the limits of a cable dispatch to give more than a few of the countless startling statements with which "The Whispering Gallery" absolutely bristles. Scarcely one of its 250 pages is without some passage, tossed off casually, which has all the potentialities of literary dynamite.

WEALTH FAILS TO UPSET THE DAILY GRIND

Philadelphia, Nov. 23.—John B. Bolton, millionaire, went to work as usual at 6.45 a. m., while his wife worked the electric washer in their home smiling cheerfully but quite unruffled over the coming of riches after a four-year legal fight.

Recently news came to them from Boston that Bolton's suit against John M. Van Heusen for failing to pay royalties of 30 per cent of the profits on the patented material which is known as semi-soft to most Americans who wear collars, had been settled out of court.

The settlement means the Boltons became actual instead of potential millionaires. A Boston court had awarded $1,314,241 to Bolton, but Van Heusen appealed the decision. Then the settlement was made for the same amount as the judgment.

Their riches came and father, mother and daughter went calmly about their daily affairs.

Perhaps the most important thing about it all is that the money will allow Miss Eliza May Bolton, who is aged 27, to take a needed trip for her health. Three months ago she suffered a nervous breakdown and she is still in bed.

"It was my work," she explained, "that caused the breakdown." She is a stenographer.

"All this money won't make any difference," she said. "We'll just go on living in our own home. And after I get well, we'll take a trip."

In her own words, the daughter of a millionaire "has never been in love, because I'm too busy with my work to have time for it."

While she talked her gray-haired mother went about her housework in a fresh house dress and a rubberized

PROTESTANT ORPHANAGE FAIR DRAWINGS

Saint John, N. B.
Nov. 21st, 1926.

To the Editor of the Daily Mail,

Dear Sir:—

There are a lot of people in all parts of the Province, who have purchased tickets on the "Hope Chest" and Automobile in connection with the Protestant Orphanage Fair recently held at Saint John in aid of The New Brunswick Protestant Orphans Home. In the past we have heard considerable complaint from people outside of the city that they were never informed as to who were the winners of the various drawings held under the above auspices. In order to obviate this in the present instance I am taking the liberty of sending you a few facts that possibly you may be able to treat as news matter in interests of your individual readers. I feel sure you will.

The hope chest was drawn for in the Imperial Theatre on Saturday 13th instant, His Worship Mayor W. W. White officiating. The winning ticket was number 5828 and was held by Mrs. C. H. Easson of Toronto, wife of C. H. Easson of the Bank of Nova Scotia a former resident of this city.

The drawing for the automobile was held last evening 20th at the same place, Mr. P. C. Taylor of Toronto officiating. The winning ticket was number 10527 and was held by Mr. Murray J. Pearson of Highfield, Queens Co., N. B. There was over 1000 persons present at both events. The net result of each of these drawing was about $4,000 each the auto slightly in the lead. The total net results of the fair will be about $20,000 or seven thousand short of the objective. There are two pledges of $1,000 each provided we can raise the remaining $5,000. We have not yet given up all hope of seeing some kind friend or friends of the orphan kiddies come forward and help us raise the balance so as to be in a position to both collect these pledges and start the new year with a clean sheet. Our cause is well worthy of it and there are so many who have never subscribed to it.

On behalf of both the fair committee and the Orphanage Board of which I have the honor to be a humble member, I wish to thank both the press and public for the measure of co-operation we have met with in our campaign, and which has made the $20,000 possible. I remain yours sincerely,

WM. H. CAMPBELL,
Chairman of Fair Committee.

SHAW SAYS SCHOOL MAMMS SHOULD BE MAMAS

London, Nov. 23.—George Bernard Shaw, winner of the Nobel prize for literature, thinks that all school mistresses should have a baby.

The Twickenham education committee recently dismissed the head mistress of the Girls' Secondary School on the ground that her responsibilities as the mother of a 7-months-old baby would be incompatible with her school duties. The head mistress, Dr. Isabel Turnadge, is a doctor of philosophy and a bachelor of sciences, and has been married three years.

G. B. S. is quoted by the Westminster Gazette as commenting:

"Twickenham is near the river and the sooner the Twickenham people put their education committee in the river the better. It would be for more sensible to refuse to allow any woman to become a teacher unless she had at least one baby, and looked after it properly."

apron. She likes to do her own housework because maids never seem to do it right.

As for John Bolton, he intends to keep right on at his job as superintendent of the Axminster rug department in the plant of John Bromley & Son. He had always worked and he couldn't stand it if he had nothing to do.
