THE GOLDEN RULE.

That a Biblical rule should be rejected as a basis for the government of the city of Edinburgh is not quite so shocking as it may seem at first blush. One of the members proposed that the admonition, "Bear ye one another's burdens," should be made the foundation for every discussion and act of the town council. It was referred to the Lord Provost for his consideration, and his committee has held the motion to be incompetent on the ground that "it was too general in terms."

It is true that this particular text might not have had "any particular bearing on the activities of the corporation," as was claimed, but it would not have been difficult to find another which could have met with pretty wide acceptance. We refer to "The Golden Rule" which is everywhere praised and rather generally disregarded. One of the objections sure to be raised against it is that it is not "practical." But it is surely possible, and if enough persons could be persuaded to make it the foundation of their conduct most of the ills of this life would disappear as if by magic. It is particularly applicable at this season of the year when the spirit of good-will is so widespread.

The making of laws and the administration of public office are no simple as they were in the beginning. Our complex civilization constantly adds new difficulties, but if there was a very general desire to follow the teachings of the Golden Rule there would be more happiness in the world.

FRENCH PARLIAMENT.

Adjournment of the French Parliament set an extraordinary precedent in that the Legislature had passed a budget within the allotted period, had balanced that budget with expected revenues for the first time since the World War and had established a record for strict adherence to the National business. Reason enough for the French to be thankful for the governmental accomplishments of Poincare's Union National Ministry.

As a climax to its work, the Chamber adopted a resolution calling for speedy reduction of the term of military service from eighteen to twelve months. The reduction has been progressive since the World War and is indicative of the slowly increasing feeling of security in Europe. Economically, it will remove another immense burden from the shoulders of the French people.

A GREAT SCIENTIST.

Millikan, of California, great scientist who has told the world more about the atom and the electron than any other living man, believes in Santa Claus. Millikan is the man who won the famous Nobel prize last year for the most distinguished work in physics.

When he was a child, he says, he believed in Santa Claus. When he was a little older, he no longer had any faith in Santa. Then, in the midst of his own children, animated by love and all the finer qualities of the spirit, he says that indeed there is a Santa Claus.

Mr. Donat Raymond of Montreal lately appointed to the senate, is one of the best known hotel men in the Dominion. He is the principal owner of the Windsor and Queen Hotels in Montreal, and one would think would be a very useful man at election time. Montreal is now able to boast of thirteen senators.

Nobody can say he's modest or admit he's modest and still be modest. Real modesty doesn't permit even a discussion of the subject. You either have or have not a tendency toward modesty. Nothing that you can say will prove you are modest. It is proved by what you do not say.

Half the time at least courage does not consist in doing the spectacular thing. It often has nothing to do with what we commonly call bravery. It often takes courage to be still, to keep from doing, to overcome the desire to do a grandstand act. Courage is not a shout. It is a still, small voice.

Smiling Bill Jamieson, inventor of the barbless fish hook, used with success by black salmon anglers on Cain's River, New Brunswick, passed away recently at his home in Michigan. He had achieved considerable fame as a fisherman and fly caster.

Father of Charlie Chaplin's wife says that a fifteen-minute session in the woodshed with his daughter on the receiving end of a shingle would do her a lot of good. As a last resort Charlie might try that. It would make a good short comedy reel, anyway.

Not fifty percent of tradition rests on fact. A strong, hard-and-fast tradition—more than one of them—has been built on somebody's imagination, chance word or dream.

Canada's youngest M. P., Mr. Louis Auger, complains of a deluge of letters from young ladies. He has learned, comments The Toronto Globe, that it pays to be advertised.

Girl bandit who robbed that Texas bank merely explained to the police that she "needed the money." Well, as a matter of fact, Christmas was coming on apace.

More marriage licenses, we read, are issued on Monday than on any other day of the week. Maybe that's why a lot of chaps always look upon it afterward as Blue Monday.

"Our greatest fear," observes the paragrapher, "is that we will be found out." Not always. The greatest fear of the man who is being dunned for a bill is that he will be found in.

A correspondent suggests that the spare tire is in most instances "merely a gesture," because, he argues, "nine times out of ten the darn thing doesn't have any air in it."

Primitive Methodist preacher of England says the Prince of Wales is "playing to the galleries," but even the Prince's critics will have to admit he's doing it very well.

A man with a Santa Claus mask held up an Arkansas bank, but that's not the first holdup perpetrated in the name of Yuletide saint.

Some of those open-faced galoshes the girls wear sound like a broken tin chain banging against a loose mud-guard.

A man doesn't get far these days by hitching his wagon to a star unless he provides her with an expensive model.

Women, says a report of the Pullman company, lose everything but their vanity cases. And their vanity.

An optimist is a chap who pays as he goes; a pessimist waits to learn whether the darn thing will go.

"She was," states a writer of fiction, "a pretty modern girl." Quite likely. Most girls are pretty modern.

Cupidity, more than the rascally little imp himself, figures in every marriage for money.

Too often the young chap who becomes wedded to his art enjoys a very dreary honeymoon.

The pedestrian has the right of way so long as he keeps out of the way.

THROUGH OUR SIEVE

In the event of a long hard winter Wall Street seems to be in a position to weather it.

Man is poor indeed if he hasn't enough friends to provide him with an alibi.

It takes a woman to wrap up a Christmas package and make it look like prosperity.

Some men seem to thwart high blood pressure by putting their feet on the desk.

You have only to read the football stories in the magazines to realize the game is a great character builder.

His first Cinderella is now suing Browning for $500,000. First thing he knows that man will lose his faith in fairies.

A multiplicity of radio broadcasting stations furnish emphatic proof that there can be too much of a good thing.

When you are sick and you don't like to have the attending physician step outside the room and talk solemnly to your wife.

Living the simple life today amounts to a matter of having as many electric buttons as possible within easy reach.

CHRISTMAS WELL OBSERVED, WEATHER GOOD

Inmates were given turkey dinner by Mayor Clark. Individual gifts were presented by the King's Daughters and the Pythian Sisters and other friends remembered the Home.

Sheriff and Mrs. J. B. Hawthorne entertained five inmates of the County Jail, all men. Turkey dinner was furnished by the Sheriff. The W. C. T. U. remembered the prisoners with gifts and Rev. I. F. Kierstead donated fruit.

Children's Aid Home.

At the Children's Aid Home, Woodstock Road, eighteen youngsters sat down to chicken dinner with all the "fixin's" including ice cream. The dining room and other parts of the building were seasonably decorated. Santa Claus visited the Home Christmas Eve and did not forget a single boy or girl filled stockings being found under each bed. Thirteen children are now in the Home. Five others were invited to dinner. In the afternoon Roy W. Smith gave the youngsters a drive about the city a sled being attached to a car for the purpose. Various organizations and private persons remembered the Home.

Victoria Hospital.

At the Victoria Hospital, Christmas celebration began at 6 a. m. when the nurses sang carols. The regular Christmas dinner was served being largely donated by the Hospital Aid. In the afternoon music was furnished by the Brunswick street Baptist Choir. To furnish music during the festive season a played-piano was donated by J. Clark & Son, Limited. Fourteen Christmas trees which appeared Christmas morning completely decorated, were at different parts of the Hospital all of the twenty-six patients being remembered. Gifts were supplied to all.

The Nurses' Home was a scene of enjoyment Christmas Eve when the nurses had their Christmas Tree.

Old Cells Demolished.

A city crew today completely demolished the wooden cells which have done duty for so many years in the police station. The installation of the three new steel cells will begin at once. The detention cell still stands but also is to be replaced eventually.

The Gaiety.

"Upstage" is the photo play at the Gaiety for Monday and Tuesday featuring Norma Shearer. A story of the stage, of conceit and self assurance. Pathe Review is also on the bill.
