THE SWIMMING HOLE.

It says in the paper that the laughter of children, a play drowns out "the gurgle of the water round the drift just below." This has reference to the swimming hole immortalized by James Whitcomb Riley. Greenfield has made a Memorial Park on the banks of Brandywine creek, but there is no swimming hole there now. Nature is under no promise to preserve swimming holes. The creeks are too tricky.

A few critics may be reluctant to set Riley down as a poet but there are millions of people less backward. If the writer can set their emotions to tingling they are ready to credit him with human understanding. If he has a gift for making verses he is a poet, and that is all there is to it.

"The Ole Swimmin' Hole" found a place in the hearts of men because they had in mind one like that of which the poet wrote. The imprints of bare feet in the dusty lane came back to them, and the years slipped off their shoulders.

It happened that in Greenfield there was one boy among the many who, in after years, found youth coming back to him in sweet, joyous memories. They were vivid, vibrant memories. So he made songs of them. "The Ole Swimmin' Hole" was one, and it has echoed in ten times ten thousand hearts. Men found their boyhood leaping at them out of the past and they were happy.

People are always happy when they find one who has the art to put into words the sentiments that lie a little below the surface of their own lives.

UNDEFENDED DEFENDANTS

Reading the testimony given in that crowded little courtroom in Somerville, N. J., one forgets occasionally that three persons are accused of murder and readily imagines that the accused are the lae Rev. Edward W. Hall and Mrs. Eleanor Mills.

In the case of these two, no defense is offered. The poor, foolish pair followed their emotions blindly, not knowing or not caring whither they were being carried. Even if their mad infatuation had not been cut short by murder, they were headed for ruin and for sorrow, whenever the full realization of their shame should come to them. Hall was shattering his own career and denying everything he had ever preached; while weak, silly Mrs. Mills hypnotized herself into believing that nothing mattered in the whole world except their "beautiful" romance.

The cruellest revenge might have been to let them live it out.

The Province of British Columbia seems to be pulling down big money from the liquor traffic. The net profits of the government for six months ending September 30th was $1,555,000 of which $544,250 will be distributed among the Municipalities and $223,250 will go to hospitals. What portion of the total was contributed by American tourists is not stated.

Chicago high schools devote a week to exercises instilling patriotism into the hearts of boys and girls. Patriotism is an attribute of the spirit. It can be cultivated. We inherit some, but we take on more by study and by thinking. And there can be no true patriotism without obedience to law.

When you are inclined to believe that little things don't count remember that a new instrument for measuring the heat of the farther stars is so delicate that fly wings are used in its construction. You can see it at the Smithsonian Institution in Washington.

Although smuggling at border points is now supposed to be a thing of the past we notice that some merchants doing business in Calais still find it profitable to run full page advertisements in a newspaper published on the Canadian side.

A man who will not do as much as he can in any good enterprise is selfish. A man who continually takes on more than he can do well is a fool. It takes a great deal of common sense to know what you can and can not do well.

A Series Explosion.
An explosion in the basement of the residence of Ald. Harry A. Smith, George street caused some excitement in the West End between four and five o'clock on Wednesday afternoon. It seems that the explosion was in connection with an oil burning furnace which Ald. Smith had lately installed. Two workmen were at work repairing a lead and it seems a drum head blew out. Ten panes of glass in the basement were broken and a workman named Fraser was severely injured. The force of the explosion was felt a block away.
