NEITHER SIDE SHOWS SIGNS OF YIELDING IN GREAT BRITAIN'S GREAT INDUSTRIAL STRUGGLE

London, May 6—The British Government and the Trades Union Congress are still far apart. Neither has shown signs of giving way in the struggle, now entering upon its fourth day, that has caused the greatest industrial upheaval the British Isles has ever experienced. Premier Baldwin still insists that the general strike orders must be withdrawn before he will enter into new negotiations. The labor leaders reply with an emphatic "no" to such a condition, but declare themselves ready to go into conference with the government with a free hand.

The prime minister has the backing of the house on the measures undertaken to control the strike situation. A Labor amendment seeking to modify a clause in the government's bill for the protection of property was defeated by a large majority. Exemplary conduct on the part of the strikers is again called for by the union leaders, and they are obeying orders in a rather unexpected way, for only at two places in Scotland, have any serious disorders occurred. There have been innumerable clashes, the breaking of windows, the overturning of automobiles, minor attacks on strike breakers and similar incidents, but in an amazing manner the two or three million men involved directly in the strike are keeping the peace.

Many Injured.

At Musselburgh, near Edinburgh, numerous passengers were injured in an attack on a train. Five policemen and as many civilians were hurt sufficiently to make hospital treatment necessary. At Glasgow, always a hotbed in time of strikes, the police were roughly handled and some of the rioters were placed under arrest.

In a message addressed to all workers the Trades Union Congress says: "The council wishes to emphasize the fact that that is a national dispute. It is necessary that every member taking part be exemplary in his conduct and not to give any opportunity for police interference. The council asks pickets especially to avoid obstruction and to confine themselves strictly to their legitimate duties."

The King and Queen are spending most of their time in Buckingham Palace keeping in close touch with the situation. Today was "cessation day" but under the exceptional circumstances there was no public celebration of the anniversary.

Volunteers Give Relief.

An abundance of voluntary labor, which is being slowly, but surely organized by the government, is greatly relieving the worst aspects of the stoppage; food is plentiful and transport is improving daily, not only in London but throughout the country.

London's underground railways and tubes are re-opening with fairly reliable service. More trains are in service on the main lines and those who are engaged at their employment are going back and forth with less inconvenience than on the first day of the strike.

If the term is permissible in connection with such a movement as a general strike it may be said that the great struggle between parliamentary government and trades unionism is being carried out up to the present in a constitutional manner.

Sum of Disorder Small.

There has been much disorder in various places, but its sum, reckoned in comparison with the magnitude of the conflict, is small, as testified even in the communique issued by the government tonight. What it may develop into later should the struggle unfortunately be protracted, nobody dares predict. There still appears little prospect of a renewal of the peace negotiations. The difficulty of such renewal, on the surface, seems almost insuperable, owing to the feeling aroused on both sides that it would be impossible without great loss of prestige to make the first advance.

In this respect it would seem to an impartial observer that the almost total suppression of newspapers by the strike acts detrimentally not only to the government and capitalist cause, which it was intended to emphasize, but also to the strikers themselves.

The disappearance of this forum of public discussion naturally keeps the general public in more or less ignorance of the exact state of affairs in the country and leaves the way open for all sorts of alarming rumors to spread.

Although the government and the labor side is each publishing its own paper the difficulty of distribution as well as of production are so great that the papers reach but a small portion of the populace.

Voice of Peace Barred.

The strikers believe that the suppression of the press acts in their favor because in a general way a large majority of the newspapers and this applied especially to London representing the capitalist cause. On the other hand, the voice of peace is equally barred and this to the disadvantage of the strikers.

During the final stage of the negotiations that failed, and up to the last moment before the actual break occurred, letters were appearing in the public press, some from great dignitaries of the church, appealing with considerable sympathy for the miners' cause and for just and impartial consideration of the whole question. Now such appeals can no longer be voiced and the cause of peace is thereby injured. What is necessary before any negotiations can be renewed is to get the situation back to where it was before the final rupture came on Monday night, when, hotfoot on the stoppage of the Daily Mail's printing presses, the government launched its ultimatum demanding unconditional withdrawal of the notices for a general strike. The council of the Trade Union Congress daily repeats that such withdrawal is impossible.

Would Save Faces.

As things stand, it would appear that only some means of having the mine owners withdraw their lockout notices would save to initiate new negotiations because that would save the face of the Trades Union leaders and enable them to withdraw the general strike notices. A statement issued by the Council of the Unions today says:

"The council is ready at any moment to resume negotiations, but gives an unqualified 'no' to the premier's unconditional withdrawal notice. The government was responsible for breaking off the negotiations and any further discussions can only be undertaken in a free and unfettered atmosphere."

Efforts For Peace.

Efforts to bring about peace are still earnestly being made in many quarters. For example, the Baptist Union assembly at Leeds has sent communications to the Archbishop of Canterbury and representatives of other churches as well as to Premier Baldwin and the Trades Union Congress urging a strike settlement. But those lost such effectiveness by the lack of press publicity.

Something may come from the deliberations of the parliamentary Labor Party, but this source is not hopeful and it is hard to see from what quarters can arise any successful intervention.

HERSCOVITCH EXPECTS HIS REINSTATEMENT

Montreal, May 6—Happy Moe Herscovitch, smiling and joking as usual, seems sure in his mind that he is going to be re-instated as an amateur.

"I want to play rugby again before I am too old," he said recently, "and I will guarantee never to perform in a ring unless the Amateur Athletic Union should ask me to do so for charity."

"I don't see why they should refuse to let me come back since Prud'homme is boxing as an amateur again in the west."

"Prud'homme, as you probably remember, went over with me to the Olympic Games in 1920. Afterwards we both entered the professional ring and we battled here in the Arena."
