LATE BEGINNERS.

Something of tremendous importance is happening in the field of higher education in America; and a report issued by Columbia University offers a clue to what it is. There are enrolled in the extension courses given at Columbia no less than 15,000 students. That, of itself, is a comfortable piece of news; but the real story is not found in mere totals. It is disclosed by analysis of the totals.

According to the director's report, almost 56 percent of the students enrolled are between the ages of 23 and 38. Of the remainder 7.27 percent are persons between 39 and 70 years of age. And only about 30 percent of the total enrollment is made up of students whose ages run from 16 to 22, or along the normal range of college students' ages. In other words, something like 63 percent of that 15,000 students are mature persons, many of them well along in middle life.

So much for point number one. Now for point number two; analysis of the courses chosen by these students reveals that practically all are studying purely cultural subjects. They are not seeking to increase earning power by speculation. Not a bit of it. They are striving rather to broaden cultural perceptions and to enrich the background of their lives.

Here assuredly is news and news to trumpet abroad. It is full of promise. It suggests an educational revolution where none was expected. Usually one thinks of colleges as populated by youth. Well, here is adult maturity thronging in. The pity of much higher education is that one receives it before he is ready either to absorb it properly or to orient it. That is the complaint of not a few young college students. But here we have men and women turning back, after being schooled in experience, to obtain what they now see to be desirable. A large percentage of those who are getting a college education miss much because they do not have any difficulty in getting it. Here are thousands of adults who turn to seek cultural background at no little cost to themselves because they realize its meaning.

The life-long sigh of the disappointed, which used to be: "Ah well, but I never had a chance to get a college education," is rendered obsolete by modern practice and opportunity. Many mature folk don't propose to be left behind by the tremendous educational ferment.

PROCLAIMING CANADA'S GOLD.

Canada's place in gold production is slowly dawning on Europe. It required the Great War to establish Canada's nationality in the eyes of the outside world, and it has been left to the League of Nations properly, though briefly, to proclaim its place in gold mining.

Only a year ago the statement was made in one of the League publications that the leading gold-producing countries were: First, Transvaal; second, the United States; third, Australasia; and, after that, "Other Countries." The 1926 list, as just issued from Geneva in the Memorandum on Currency and Central Banks corrects this injustice. The countries in order of production are now given as: Transvaal, the United States, Canada, Australasia, and "Other Countries."

The explanatory note with the table says: "The world's output of gold in 1925 was the same as in 1924. The production in Canada has more than doubled since 1913, and has gone a long way toward counterbalancing the steady decline in the output of the United States of America and Australasia."

The gold output of the Transvaal in 1925 was more than half of the whole, being 9,600,000 ounces out of a total of 18,800,000 for the world. The United States contributed 2,300,000 ounces, a drop from 2,500,000 in 1924 and from 4,300,000 in 1913. Canada produced last year 1,700,000 ounces, compared with 1,500,000 in 1924 and 800,000 in 1913.

It is made apparent we are definitely on the up-grade in this important economical field and this fact should be driven home by the Canadian Ministers now in London, as Canada's representative at Geneva, Dr. W. A. Riddell has done his work.

British investments in Canadian gold mines were only 2.8 per cent. of the whole in 1922 and have since risen to about 5 per cent.

Don't Squeeze Black-Heads—Dissolve Them

Squeezing and pinching out blackheads make the pores large and cause irritation. Blackheads are caused by accumulations of dust and dirt and secretions from the skin, and there is only one safe and sure way and one that never fails to get rid of them—a simple way, too—that is to dissolve them. Just get from any drug store about two ounces of peroxide powder—sprinkle a little on a hot, wet cloth—rub over the blackheads briskly for a few seconds—wash off, and you'll be surprised to see that every blackhead has disappeared, and the skin will be soft and the pores in their natural condition.
