CLAIMS THAT LIVER, HEART AND TRIPE ARE GOOD VALUE; HAVE IRON IN LARGE AMOUNTS

Liver, sweetbreads, brains, heart, tripe and kidneys deserve a place on the menu. When properly prepared, all these have the same values as other meats. They contain muscle-making tissue and iron in rather high amounts.

In purchasing liver, one may get the liver of calf, beef or pig. Calf's liver is the most delicate, is lighter in color, but is two or three times as expensive as beef or pig liver. Nevertheless, if carefully prepared, both pig and beef liver may be very acceptable.

Veal heart is most generally used, though beef heart is good. Lamb's heart is very small, but delicate. These compare in price with the cheaper cuts of meat.

Veal Kidney Is Excellent.

Lamb's kidney is the most delicate, each kidney being very small—about the size of an egg. Veal kidney is excellent. Beef and pig kidney are stronger in flavor and are usually soaked overnight in salt water to remove some of the flavor. The kidneys from all animals are about as inexpensive as the cheapest cuts of meat in all but metropolitan markets.

Sweetbreads are of two kinds—the pancreas, or "stomach sweetbreads," and the "throat sweetbreads," a gland found near the throats of young animals. The latter is more delicate than the former. Calves' sweetbreads are those usually used and are especially delicate and good in tempting the appetites of sick persons, for they are mild in flavor, delicate in texture, and easily digested. In price, sweetbreads are more expensive than the most expensive cuts of meat.

Brains Inexpensive to Buy.

Brains of all animals are used and are inexpensive to buy, comparing with the cheapest cuts of meat.

Tripe is a part of the stomach of the ox, and is popular with many who have become accustomed to its flavor and texture. If it is perfectly prepared it may be quite delicious. Long cooking seems to be one of the main factors in success in cooking tripe.

Liver—Many persons consider that boiling water should be poured over liver before it is cooked. Though this is not always done, the outside skin

OLD LONDON LAUGHS DESPITE TRIALS OF THE GENERAL STRIKE; SOME AMUSING INCIDENTS

London, May 12—Lewis Carroll's nonsense lines about the man who thought he saw a banker's clerk descending from a bus, He looked again and found it was a hippopotamus.

flashed into the mind of an American newspaper man early this week when he found himself suddenly jolted into Alice's Wonderland with the polite query from the omnibus conductor, "Is this the Strand?"

An investigation into the meaning of this reversal of the normal roles between passenger and conductor revealed that the conductor was a stock broker's clerk doing strike duty on the bus. He functioned well so long as all he had to do was to "punch in the presence of the passengers." The fact that he had not the vaguest notion when the passenger had exhausted his fare didn't cramp his style in the slightest, for the proverbial honesty of London's bus riders was stimulated to the highest point by the fantastic phenomenon of a conductor being personally conducted by his bus load.

One interesting thing in the early days of the strike has been the excellence of London's telephone service. Under normal conditions the British public growls, and frequently not without justification, at telephone delays. But this week, despite official warnings that the telephone service probably would become congested, it really seems better than ever before. Whether this is merely because the other amenities of life are working so badly, or whether the operators have made a special effort to meet the emergency, is not known. But the fact remains the telephone service is above par.

But despite the occasional humorous incidents, everybody seems to be keeping a tight rein on their emotions or it may be merely a testimonial to the habitual British calm under stress. In the last three days the heartiest laugh heard on the streets was one which swept from one end of Aldwych to the other as a dignified man sped up the center of the street mounted on an extremely diminutive motor scooter. The joke gained zest from the fact that the rider was having so much trouble managing his steed that he did not dare look around to see why all the crowd was laughing.

One immediate and rather noticeable effect of the strike was a decided diminution of the number of habitual street "casuals"—pavement artists, match-sellers, street singers, hawkers and beggars. It is difficult to believe that they also are on strike, but nobody seems to know whether they decided business would be unproductive or whether they have volunteered and taken on straight trade union wages from the government.

Great Britain's first general strike has not been without its sporting adventures on the side. A number of tourists had made arrangements to travel across the Atlantic by a Canadian steamship from Liverpool when the industrial upheaval disrupted all railroad traffic. At first they feared they would be stranded in England, but later they were informed that a bus would convey them all the way from London to Liverpool. With keen anticipation the travelers began their journey at 8 o'clock on the morning of the third day of the strike. They were warned that the journey would last ten hours, and perhaps longer. The bus tourists, however, refused to be worried. They expected to enjoy the trip as a first experience, and the element of danger, because of the rowdiness of hooligans along the way, gave it an added spice.

One of the few means of transportation not affected by the strike is the coaching service between London and Brighton. After the lapse of more than half a century it recently was restored mainly to please American tourists, who, it was thought, would be delighted to make the trip by the conveyance which Dickens made immortal. But the service started by its promoters in a spirit of romanticism may prove more utilitarian than was first expected.

Heart does not need special preliminary treatment, except to see that all openings or cavities are clear of blood.

Sinew and Fat Removed.

Kidneys are split for broiling, and the sinew and fat at the centre of the kidney should be removed. Broil or saute for only five or six minutes. A longer process leaves the kidneys tough. In stewing, the water should be kept below the boiling point, or the kidneys will be hardened. If the boiling point is reached it will take a long period of cooking to render them tender again.

Tripe may be obtained fresh or pickled and is of two kinds, plain or honeycomb. The honeycomb tripe is considered the better kind. Canned tripe is available for those who are unable to obtain the fresh.

Sweetbreads and brains should be put into cold water as soon as possible after being purchased. If the water is changed after becoming colored the organs will be whiter when cooked. Sweetbreads are always parboiled before being used in any recipe, and brains are better also if so treated.

Parboiling and Preparing.

To parboil and prepare—To each quart of water add one teaspoon of vinegar and one-half teaspoon of salt. Bring to boiling point, add sweetbreads or brains and cook slowly for twenty minutes, rain and plunge into cold water. Remove tubes and outside membrane, but do not break the organs themselves. If they are to be served breaded, sauted or broiled, the each piece separately in cheesecloth, pulling it tightly enough to hold together in good shape. Let cool under a weight, which will cause a better more compact shape.

Brains possibly are less commonly used than sweetbreads. It may be that the softer texture is disliked. They are very often scrambled with eggs. If brains are first parboiled, then combined with ingredients in other dishes, this softness of texture is overcome to a large extent.

DELICIOUS VIANDS CAN EASILY BE MADE

"The milk has soured!" wails the homemaker often in the hot summer months. She thinks the day is lost, but if she only knew how many delicious things she could make with this same sour milk she would wail no longer.

Even a few tablespoons of sour cream can be used in many ways, and some good cooks prefer to cook with sour milk, as foods made with it keep moist much longer than those made with sweet milk. It is difficult for most cooks to alter recipes which call for sweet milk and baking powder in order to use sour milk and soda, so the best thing to do is to keep on file, in case of emergency, recipes which call for sour milk.

Here are some points it is wise to remember in using sour milk or cream:

If you use cream in a recipe which calls for milk, you must reduce the amount of shortening called for. Otherwise the food would be too "short" and likely to fall in the baking or to crumble when taken from the pan.

In using soda always stir it with the flour unless the recipe directs otherwise. It should be measured most accurately, and if lumpy should be sifted before measuring it. Even a tiny bit too much soda will spoil an otherwise good recipe.

It is difficult to tell just the amount of soda to use, as not all sour milk is of the same acidity. Sometimes the inexperienced cook is puzzled by what seems to her to be too much soda in one recipe in comparison with another. But if she looks more carefully she will usually see that the recipe calls for molasses, certain kinds of meal, lemon juice or chocolate, all of which are slightly acid and require the extra soda. Sometimes soda and baking powder are both used in the same recipe.

Sour cream, whipped or unwhipped may be added to mayonnaise or cooked salad dressings. This makes an especially delicious dressing for cucumbers. Add a tiny bit of cayenne, too, if there is none in the dressing.

THE TRACTOR A MOST USEFUL IMPLEMENT

The day is not far distant when the tractor will become an indispensable unit in industrial work, according to Wallace R. Campbell, vice-president of the Ford Motor Company of Canada, Limited. "The tractor was designed originally for the farm and in that regard it is as necessary today as a horse was twenty years ago," he said in an interview. "But we are finding now that farm work is only the beginning of a tractor's usefulness—it can be adapted to serve almost every purpose for which power is required. In the United States there are 660 firms manufacturing over 2,000 attachments for the Fordson alone.

"In Canada the use of the tractor in industry has not developed so rapidly, but many employers are realizing that they can save money and save their men by utilizing power wherever possible. In our own works we ask men to undertake no heavy labour, and practically all the inter-departmental carrying is done by rubber-tired tractors."

At the present time, a number of manufacturers are co-operating to sell equipment in Canada. Six distributing centres in St. John, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Edmonton and Vancouver have been already arranged and nearly a million dollars' worth of equipment has been brought into the country. The equipment includes Tractor hoists, shovels, scoops, etc. In announcing this new development, which is likely to play a great part in the industrial development of the Dominion, Mr. Campbell said that the Ford Company of Canada had identified itself with the plan in the interests of industry.

Tokio, May 12—A miniature tower of pearls, both cultured and natural, will form part of Japan's exhibit at the Philadelphia sesquicentennial exposition. It will have a value of approximately $350,000,000.

The exhibit is constructed in the shape of a pagoda, is slightly over three feet high and contains 201,230 cultured and 29,270 natural pearls of varying sizes. The display has received the approval of the Empress.

Bozo—Where do you think the population is the most dense?
Mozo—From the neck up, of course.
