RESULT OF THE TUESDAY'S ELECTION IN THE U. S. IS REGARDED AS UNCERTAIN

New York, Nov. 4—Another memorable campaign passes tomorrow into history. On Tuesday, the people of the United States will elect a president, a vice-president, a complete House of Representatives, 37 Senators, 34 State governors, numerous members of State administrations, State judges and State officers.

In a number of states there will be referenda. Generally these are on such questions as the issue of bonds for highway construction and the like, although Arkansas will submit evolution to the test of the poll. There, electors will be called upon to decide whether tax-supported schools shall be allowed to teach "as a fact" that "man descended from a lower order of life."

Arizona will decide on a constitutional amendment "to prohibit the enactment of any law respecting the establishment of any method of healing."

Florida, Idaho, Missouri and North Carolina are to vote on increased indemnities for members of state legislatures.

Who will be the next President of the United States, Governor "Al" Smith, Democrat, or Herbert Hoover, Republican?

And will Republicans or Democrats control the next Congress?

State Elections.

State elections and state referenda have their own importance, but these are the questions eagerly asked, debated and contested in every state in the Union, for the battle between the rival candidates for presidency has been spectacular even among the spectacular battles of American politics. Never perhaps were two such dissimilar personalities in a contest, for the high office. Rarely have issues been raised which so challenged party allegiances on both sides or left electorates in so much bewilderment. On the one hand is "Al" Smith, former newsboy on the New York streets with little school education but a campaigner to the manner born, four times elected governor of his native state. On the other is Herbert Hoover, noted engineer, internationally famous as an administrator and organizer of relief, but knowing nothing of campaign oratory. On the platform, over the radio, everywhere, Democrats extol the great human sympathies of the man who rose from the streets. Republicans return that Hoover too had humble origin, that he is the son of a blacksmith born in a village in Iowa, that, left fatherless as a boy he had to work his way.

By the less scrupulous, resorting to the so-called whispering campaign, religion has been the readiest method of personal attack. It has been said that if a Catholic like Smith is elected, there will be papal domination at the White House. It has been charged that a Quaker like Hoover cannot properly act as commander-in-chief of the armed forces of the United States. Republican and Democratic organizations alike have been bitter in their charges of religious intolerance.

Prohibition.

And to the disturbing factor of religion is added that of prohibition, with its wets and dries driving a wedge into both parties. Governor Smith proclaimed himself as favoring such amend of prohibition laws as would permit state sale after the Canadian plan. Hoover stood against repeal the Eighteenth (the prohibition) Amendment. He admitted there had been grave abuses but argued that an "organized searching investigation" could alone determine the wise method of correcting them. In cities and industrial districts particularly Governor Smith's proposals have powerful appeal. And they cut, not only into Republican ranks, they cut into the ranks of his own party. In the south "dry" Democrats were active against his candidature.

Yet so curious was the working of political cross-currents that Senator Sheppard of Texas, author of the Eighteenth Amendment, was himself out working for Governor Smith.

Four years ago there were approximately 2,000,000 ballots cast in the presidential fight. So great has been the increase in registration this year, so keen is public interest, that the popular vote on Tuesday may run up to 35,000,000. And as the clamor dies, political prophets admit their bewilderment. A fortnight ago, straw ballots, betting odds and prophecies all went to indicate a fairly easy victory for Hoover. The receptions which Smith received in his recent tour of New Jersey and along the Atlantic seaboard, have given new hope to the Democrats. They are wealthier in campaign funds than they have ever been before. They are as confident of victory as are the Republicans.

AGRICULTURAL SCHOOL OPENS HERE TOMORROW

Good Facilities

All the facilities possessed at the Experimental station, its live stock, horses, cattle, sheep, swine and poultry; its granary its orchard, its green house and its library containing the conclusions and results of years of investigation and experimental work—are employed for the school's service. The staff of instructors are thoroughly familiar with the every day facts and problems of the farmer's work and fully competent to demonstrate what is newest and best in farm practices.

The recreational and social life of the students while at the school will better equip country boys for team-play and for participation in young people's Club activities. The games and physical training are under the direction of qualified instructor, and the demonstrational lectures in classroom and the discussions and debates form a valuable training for leadership.

Mr. O. C. Hicks of the Provincial Department of Agriculture, will act as principal of the school.

JUDGMENT TO BE GIVEN TUESDAY IN STAIRS CASE

before Magistrate Haines of Devon. The evidence given by the Provincial Police, who arrested the men, and relatives of the grocer, Mr. Brewer, was insufficient to convict the other three men, but other evidence combined with his own confession, was deemed enough to send Stairs up for trial. Speedy trial was elected by the prisoner.

The cases of both the prosecution and defence were heard on Saturday, the prosecution finishing its case in the morning and the defence being heard in the afternoon. C. L. Dougherty appeared for the crown while E. Allison MacKay was counsel for the defence.

DEFIES THE MODERN AGE

(New York Sun)

"To be or not to be?" The question has confronted humankind since long before Hamlet's famous soliloquy and now it is bothering the dear old ladies of today. Not the bold as brass old ladies but the few timid ones who know not whether to lift their skirts from the ground and be "modern" or to let them trail and be scorned as "old fashioned."

The question is not one to taste only but involves modesty, morals, and what not, and the old ladies are sorely worried. Some of them defiantly imitate their granddaughters and hide trembling thoughts under rouge and powder; others remain sweet grandmotherly creatures in dress. And by either extreme (since both are so familiar) they escape public notice.

Didn't Arrive for Game

Although many football fans were expecting to see Beverly McCaulay, U. N. B. graduate among the Montreal English players who lost to U. N. B. here Saturday in the MacTavish Cup final, they were disappointed for the former Red and Black football star missed his train at Montreal and could not possibly arrive in time to participate in the game. Local well wishers of the athlete were not the only ones disappointed in his failure to appear in time for the game. His mother and father arrived in St. John from Prince Edward Island expecting their son to meet them there; but he didn't come and they left for their homes in Grand Manan.

Sacred Concert Last Night.

The sacred concert put on last evening in the Opera House by the Chautauqua entertainers drew a large crowd of people who enjoyed it immensely. Besides the program of sacred music given by the Chautauqua people themselves, Mrs. Neva Buckley Inch sang several very pleasing solos. The capacity of the Opera House was taxed by the large number present.

* SPECIAL ATTRACTION *
* AT GAIETY THEATRE *

"Heart to Heart" is the photo play at the Gaiety with Mary Astor the featured player. Although Mary Astor as the princess, takes the eye, it is Louise Fazenda, as small-town, motherly Aunt Katie, who takes the show. Louise in other days was a comedienne with the resiliency and inadaptability of a golf-ball. Nowadays her parts are still funny but less violent. She is perfect in the role of a middle-aged wife who still bakes her own pies and salt-rising bread and has a flock of dillies sitting about in the guest room.

Lucien Littlefield, as her husband, is supplied with enough gags to make three comedies there's a peach where he paints the porch all around himself and has to figure ways and means, not only of getting off his island, but of finishing the job. He even makes something as trite as a pair of tight shoes funny.

A certain large percentage of the underdogs belong there.
