WARS LAID TO ARROGANCE OF INSPECTORS

Berlin, April 30—Arthur Hammerstein, who brought "Rose Marie" to Berlin for a prolonged run, thinks he has discovered the cause of wars.

"It's the customs officials who are responsible for wars," the New York producer said when he reached Berlin after having traveled through France, Belgium and Germany. "They're the same the world over, not excepting those of the United States. They come into your compartment at any time of the day or night, assume that you are a smuggler and treat you as though they were gods from Olympus."

"Naturally bad feeling is thereby engendered at the very moment you enter a new country. Your good humor is gone and you unwittingly look with hostile eyes at the country which you have just entered."

"Now multiply this hostility by the number of travelers crossing the frontier; is it any wonder then that wars ensue?"
