NOVA SCOTIA'S POLICE PROBLEM

The recently organized provincial police force of our sister province seems to have made a bad beginning. According to certain newspapers in Nova Scotia the police in Cape Breton held up, motorist at the point of their revolvers and extracted fines for speeding, thus making themselves police and magistrate both. Naturally such an occurrence has aroused the indignation of the Nova Scotia people. An investigation is being made. The Halifax Chronicle hints that the possible result may be the disarming of the police. It is true, though, that there are people in Nova Scotia as well as New Brunswick, with whom the newly organized provincial force is unpopular and who are only too glad to spread and exaggerate reports of misconduct by police. The police are deserving of support of all good citizens and their work should not be made difficult because of political complications. At the same time we must assure ourselves against third degree methods and the impromptu court of the road.

One of the best known radio stations in New England has written this to the jokes on Scotch thrift. It is about time. The keen edge of the Scotch joke has been dulled; when razor blades become useless we throw them away.

About the only thing that will make a farmer more peevish than to have a candidate tell him how much money he made on his crops last year is to have a far journal tell him how he could get rich by farming more intensively.

A radio wizzard in Youngstown, Ohio, recently drove three automobiles by "remote control." It will be remembered that remote control, though not known as such, used to consist of knotting the reins around the whipstock.

A youth in Revere, Mass., lost his voice through sickness and recovered it in an airplane. A lady in Brooklyn holed out in one, on two consecutive shots. This also improves the ability to talk.

We don't believe the report that Peggy Joyce is writing her memoirs. It's a cinch Peggy won't become publicly reminiscent until she gets through marrying, and it looks now as though that were a long time off.

A British psychologist says the thing that makes more people tired than anything else is housework. Quite right; it even makes us tired to watch housework being done.

Preposterous Story: "Once upon a time there was a fellow who used the word 'loggerheads' freely and had a full and exact notion of what it meant."

A world's record is claimed by an unskilled Detroit man who recently took an automobile apart in 30 seconds at a grade crossing.

Much is made of the fact that scientists found a skull in Arizona an inch thick, but what, we would like to know, is so remarkable about that?

Our experience is that the fellow who is always in demand to keep the bridge score never has to buy lead pencils.

Always a very sad affair is an attempt to carry experience in one department of life into some other.

Nothing is responsible for more false hopes than one good cantaloup.

Who can remember when the same tune only did for one popular song?

Our conception of the ideal mate is one who has a greater attraction for mosquitoes than we have.

"Man lives only when he lives dangerously," said Sir Arthus Keith. And even then he doesn't live long.

Suppose Your Car Made it Necessary to Call an Ambulance

Public opinion and the police authorities are very severe with the motorist who causes personal injury to others. The fact that a pedestrian was careless seldom carries as much weight as the fact that he sustained injuries. That your car was the cause of the injury is worry enough. Judgments are usually heavy—see that you have adequate insurance.

We can protect you against law suits and expenses should your car be the cause of personal injury to others.
