PREMIER PASHA OF EGYPT HAS RESIGNED OFFICE, THE PROPOSED BRITISH TREATY REJECTED

Cairo, Egypt, March 4—Premier Sarwat Pasha today resigned his office for "reasons of health."

The cabinet council met last night, without the Premier, and agreed upon the terms of a note sent to the British High Commissioner, Lord Lloyd, rejecting the proposed Anglo-Egyptian treaty. It is understood that the Premier handed this note to the High Commissioner before resigning.

The Egyptian government's rejection of the proposed treaty and Premier Sarwat's consequent resignation were forecast several days ago in an official dispatches from Cairo. Today's developments puts Anglo-Egyptian relations back to the position occupied in 1922 when Great Britain granted Egypt conditional independence.

Dissolution Seen

It was not known what the next steps will be, but it is understood that the Wafdists, or nationalists, who were responsible for the break are not anxious to undertake the responsibilities of office and therefore it is probable that Parliament will be dissolved.

Sarwat's resignation, it is understood, was due to the fact that he was responsible for the compromise proposal in the Anglo-Egyptian treaty under which British occupation of Egypt should continue another decade with eventual reference of the matter to the League of Nations.

It was understood here that the note handed to Lord Lloyd states that the terms of the proposed treaty were unacceptable since they were held to be incompatible with the independence of Egypt, because they imply that Great Britain has the right to occupy

Egypt. This the Egyptian government finds itself unable to admit.

History of Case

Discussions of the proposed treaty between Egypt and Great Britain were begun last summer in London between Sarwat Pasha and Sir Austen Chamberlain, and a draft was more recently prepared after negotiations between Sarwat and Lord Lloyd at Cairo.

While none of the correspondence has so far been made public it has been generally believed that one of the points Egypt was unlikely to accept was in the insistence that a British garrison be maintained in Egypt for the protection of the Suez Canal.

Egypt was said to have objected further that this condition, which it considered tantamount to recognition by Egypt of the British occupation, would not be removed by a provision under which the League of Nations would be invited to arbitrate should the two governments fail to affect a permanent arrangement before the end of the decade.

British Concessions

On the other hand, it was reported that Great Britain had agreed to recognize Egyptian independence by raising the commissioner to an ambassador and to recognize Egypt as competent to join the League of Nations. It was understood that the status of the Sudan had been satisfactorily arranged.

While the Egyptian cabinet had the treaty draft under consideration, students in Cairo twice staged demonstrations in front of the Nationalist headquarters, but these were dispersed without serious results.

MARY'S SKIRT, SHORT AND AIRY, DISCLOSES HER

London, Mar. 3—The venerable bishop of Ely and the royal-by-marriage Viscount Lascelles, the King's son-in-law, are debating the authorship of a new form of campaign against the modish short skirt.

The campaign started with this rhyme:

Half an inch, half an inch, half an inch shorter.

The skirts are the same of mother and daughter.

When the wind blows each one of them shows

Half an inch, half an inch more than she oughter.

Viscount Lascelles announced that the bishop was the author. The bishop, in an article, denied authorship, but continued another rhyme of his own:

Mary had a little skirt,

So neat, so bright, so airy;

It never shows a speck of dirt,

But it surely does show Mary.

The bishop qualified his statement by adding to the last line: At least in so far as the portion of her below the knees are concerned."

Once started on the campaign, the bishop is going through with it in the same indirect fashion.

"I think modern fashions have robbed women, especially older women, of a measure of grace, dignity and charm which is associated with the dress of previous generations," he said.

"Flowing robes not only enhance physical perfection, but also modify or conceal physical imperfections which modern dress emphasizes and proclaims. There are many women who cannot really afford to be so candid about their ankles and so on."

THE YELLOW FOUNTAIN PEN COMES BACK

(New York Sun.)

The advertising man was a tall conservatively dressed, dignified individual. Nothing of the frivolous was allowed to creep into the makeup; big business had to be obtained in a big way, with a big manner.

But in the office one day he needed money. From his hip pocket he drew his check book and from his vest pocket his fountain pen. It was the largest one obtainable with noble gold bands encircling it but—its color was light mustard yellow. The contrast was too great for the members of the office force, they just laughed. The advertising man was not the least little bit disturbed.

"Laugh," he said if you want to, but a man has to protect himself somehow. You know," he continued, "I make hundreds of contracts every year and each one has to be signed by the advertiser. If they have to spend time looking for a pen it gives them a chance to change their minds so I always have a fountain pen handy. Then I found that a number of these people, instead of handing the pen back to me, slipped it, quite naturally, into their vest pockets.

"At the end of the year, I had lost fifty fountain pens and I never cared to remind the advertiser that the pen was mine, besides it wouldn't be good business. I tried to get the cost of lost pens into my expense account, but the auditing department wouldn't stand for it. After thinking the matter over I hit on this idea. No one can appropriate a pen of that color and if they could they wouldn't."

For once the office force agreed with him and each and every member thereof went out and bought himself a large, light mustard-colored fountain pen.

St. Stephen, March 4—Melville Norman Cockburn, K. C., prominent barrister of St. Stephen, former judge of Probate and former councillor of Charlotte county, died at his home here this evening after an illness of about 10 days, contracted on his return from Fredericton after attending a session of the provincial legislature for the presentation of the Cooper dam bill, which he had drafted. The serious nature of his illness was soon realized and his daughter, Miss Kathleen Cockburn, who has been engaged in social service work in New York, was called home and reached here Tuesday.

Judge Cockburn has been a leader in Charlotte county activities of many kinds throughout his life and only a short while ago was appointed as chairman of the Board of School Trustees of St. Stephen. For 30 years, from 1887 to 1917, he served as clerk of the Circuit Court for Charlotte county. He became referee in equity in 1887 and held the office of judge of probate from 1890 to 1917. He received the honor of being made a Queen's counsel in 1899.

In 1917, when he relinquished his duties as judge of probate, he accepted the responsible appointment on the Supreme Council of the I. O. F. and removed from St. Andrews to St. Stephen, where he had resided since that time.
