Although the weather has moderated slightly the river at this point to have reached Doaktown. All three bridges had covered spans, which were carried some distance and badly broken up by contact with running ice.

To Act Promptly

The Minister on his return to the city said that he had given orders to officials of his department to have repairs made with the least possible delay. Of course, he added, not much could be done until the water fell and the ice moved out, but he was determined that the interruption to traffic should not continue any longer than was absolutely necessary. He said that the spans which had been carried out had all seen considerable service and would soon have had to be replaced, so that after all the loss would not be a serious one.
