Old Times Recalled

The following paper on the History of the One Hundred and Fourth Regiment was read before the York and Sunbury Historical Society at its last meeting. Sterling Brannen, who read the paper, brings out much valuable historical matter not heretofore published.

The war with the United States, which necessitated the famous march of the 104th, was in 1812, 1813 and 1814, more than half a century prior to Confederation, so the Maritime Provinces were not then part of Canada. There was no Dominion at that time. Canada comprised only the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

The New Brunswick Regiment of Fencible Infantry, later H. M. 104th, was stationed in New Brunswick from the year of its organization, 1803, till the year of its unparalleled Winter march to Quebec, 1813. Fredericton was headquarters. Capt. Shore, with two companies, went to Sydney, N.S., on garrison duty for a prolonged period. In 1809 part of the Regiment was sent to St. John, to take the place of the Imperial Regiment, the 101st, which had been transferred to the West Indies from there. When the 104th left Fredericton in February 1813 for active service in the war with the United States, a battalion of the 8th Regiment, Imperial troops, came here. The other battalion of that Regiment was fighting in Upper Canada.

After participating in the war, the 104th Regt. (what was left of it) was for one year in Quebec. From 1815 to May 24, 1817, it did garrison duty in Montreal. On that date, the heroic Regiment, New Brunswick's own, was disbanded. Less than two hundred, many of them maimed, returned to Fredericton. Two hundred, out of eleven hundred who had left homes and families in 1813 to fight for their country. What a sacrifice those noble, unafraid, New Brunswickers of 1813 made. I forgot to mention that about half of the Regiment went to the war by boat. And what lack of appreciation there has been. The British Government of the time did not even award medals to these heroes. Even the descendants of these brave defenders of our Country have allowed the glorious deeds of the 104th to fade from memory, till hardly anybody knows that such an excellent fighting unit ever existed. It is very gratifying to realize that a monument in their memory is this year to be placed in Fredericton, the headquarters of the unit from 1803 to 1813, and the starting point of that wonderful and historic snowshoe march to war. In a paper read before the Fredericton Historical Society in April 1882, the late Hon. G. E. Fenety mentions the fact that a silver trumpet, suitably inscribed, was presented to the 104th by the New Brunswick Legislature just prior to the Regiment's departure for Quebec. The arms of the province were engraved on the trumpet. Every member of the unit felt a personal pride and interest in it. When the corps was disbanded in May 1817, the silver trumpet got into the hands of the Lieut. Governor, Major-General M. Hunter, who was also Commander-in-Chief in the Province during his office. On the eve of his return to England, the authorities presented him with the trumpet, and it is now in England, in possession of some descendants of General Hunter. I wonder if, after all these years, the trumpet would not be of far more interest to the people of the Province of New Brunswick than to members of the Hunter family in England. Would it be out of place to propose that the silver trumpet be returned to the City whence those to whom it was originally presented departed on their march to victory and, to most of them, to death?
