ECONOMIC EFFECT OF SANCTIONS

With sanctions impending against Italy as the aggressor in the East African imbroglio, the probable effect of the exercise of such penalties on three powers—Italy, France and Britain—has been summarized in these three brief statements.

Italy

Italy stands to lose several billion lire yearly in exports by isolation from other League of Nations members when the League imposes economic and financial sanctions against this country.

But Italy feels this loss will be made up in exports to other countries, Italian economists insist.

Quoting recent reports, they showed the so-called "gold bloc" countries—Switzerland, Poland, Holland, France, Belgium and Luxembourg—all members of the League in a survey here in 1933, took only 21.9 per cent of Italy's total exports of 5,980,000,000 lire. (This lire is quoted currently at about 8 cents).

The United Kingdom, which would be another sanctioning nation, took 11.4 per cent, while the non-league members, Germany and the United States bought 12.2 and 8.7 per cent, respectively.

Other countries, both members and non-members of the League, bought Italian goods to the extent of 45.8 per cent.

One effect of the proposed sanctions undoubtedly would be the dwindling of exports in Italian foodstuffs, which constitute almost 33 per cent of the total exports; but such exports will be needed by Italy itself during the war.

On the imports side, economists pointed out that Germany and the United States always have been Italy's greatest single sources of supply. The United States has furnished 15 per cent and Germany 14.6 per cent of the total imports, which aggregated 7,400,000,000 lire in the quoted survey.

The gold bloc countries together furnished Italy with only 14.6 per cent of the total imports. Italians, therefore, do not believe the nation of historic information. Asked whether he had obtained enough pieces to be starved out for lack of supplies unless the United States, Germany, Japan and other countries not members of the League take measures against her.

reconstruct an entire animal, he replied in the negative, but added that he would probably be able to reconstruct the head of one.

For Everybody to See

It will take two years to prepare all the material, but a few of the best specimens will be placed on exhibit at the museum soon.

France

French economists pointed out today that Yugoslavia would be one of the greatest losers economically should strict economic sanctions be applied against Italy.

If a halt in world trade with Italy were ordered, Yugoslavia would lose her best customer, since the Italians buy more than a quarter of the total exports of France's Little Entente ally.

Observers reported the commercial factor was balanced by Serbian sympathy with Ethiopia's desire to maintain its independence and the Croats' and Slovenes' memories of Flume.

France would lose a slightly favorable trade balance in case commercial traffic were halted, but French exports to Italy constitute less than one thirtieth of France's total world exports.

Imports from Italy are less than one fiftieth of this nation's total imports. During the first six months of 1935, France's imports from Italy were valued at 210,337,000 francs, and her exports to Italy at 280,456,000 francs. (This franc is quoted currently at about 6.5 cents).

Britain

If the League of Nations stops Italy's foreign trade through economic sanctions Great Britain, it was estimated today, will lose more than £9,000,000 annually in goods exported to the Mediterranean power.

British miners would suffer most, since more than a third of the total exports to Italy are British coal.

The British iron, steel, machinery, woolen and automobile trades also would be affected. Because of the difficulty of obtaining payment, many British manufacturers already have ceased accepting Italian orders for goods.

Great Britain buys £8,500,000 of Italian goods. In case of stoppage trade with Italy, it is thought, most of this material could be obtained elsewhere.

Statisticians and military observers believe that if a ban on the export of munitions to Italy could be enforced, the Ethiopian war might be of short duration.

Italy provided only 1.7 per cent. of the world export of arms in 1934; but no matter how large the stocks she has on hand, war wastage—estimated at 100 per cent monthly in case of airplane—would rapidly shrink them, experts say, and she would lack the means of manufacturing fresh supplies.

Only the United States, Great Britain and the Soviet are self-sufficient in most of their war necessities. Italy lacks chrome ore, mica, nickel, platinum, rubber, tin, tungsten, coal, copper, cotton, iron, lead, manganese, petroleum, wool and zinc.
