

NATION WAS HAPPY WHEN KING WED PRINCESS MARY

Princess Mary First Betrothed To Clarence, George's Elder Brother

LONDON, April 30—"Sir William Harcourt was glad to see the Prince in such good health and spirits. The charm of his courtesy and kindness was never more conspicuous. The more Sir William sees of the Duke of York, the more he is struck by the grace of his manner and the art of pleasing all with whom he comes in contact, a quality which he has inherited from both his parents. He seems often to remind one of the inexpressible charm of the Princess."

This was the verdict upon the character of our present King George V, which in a letter of 40 years ago, written by Sir William Harcourt who was then deputizing for Gladstone, that monumental figure amongst British Prime Ministers. The letter was written in the same year that the then Duke of York was married to his cousin, then called Princess Mary of Teck, now known as Queen Mary.

The previous 12 months had brought changes of immense moment in the life of the future George V. His elder brother, the Duke of Clarence, the idol of his mother, Queen Alexandra, had been cut down in the full flower of early manhood, and Prince George had accordingly come into the direct line of succession to the Throne, following his grandmother, Queen Victoria, and his father, the Prince of Wales, later to become Edward VII. Until the death of his brother, Prince George had no idea of pursuing any line of life except a steady career in the Royal Navy. His life, it seemed then, would be very similar to that of his uncle, the Duke of Connaught, also a second son of the reigning monarch, who was happy and content through so long a span to take the army as his profession.

Any such scheme became impossible following the death of the Duke of Clarence, and the younger brother had perforce to visualize himself upon the throne of England in the years to come. The Duke of Clarence, less than 12 months before his death, had become betrothed to his cousin, Princess Victoria May of Teck. It was with every token of satisfaction that the nation heard that the Duke of York was to marry his dead brother's fiancée. The Princess belonged to a minor branch of the British Royal Family, which, in a variety of ways had earned the good-will of the people at large. The proposal of an all-British alliance was extremely popular.

The wedding took place July, 1893, at the Chapel Royal, St. James' Palace. The honeymoon was at Sandringham, lent by the bridegroom's father, afterwards King Edward VII.

WATCHING THEM MAKE PICTURES

There is bigger drama on the set of "Men on Her Mind" than the dramatic scene Bette Davis and Allison Shipworth are playing, for sitting on a chair, watching, is Emmett Flynn. Flynn wanders from stage to stage at Warners. He looks on. Occasionally he plays a bit in a mob sequence. He is trying to make a comeback in pictures; and of the many on this comeback trail, he is one of the few who stands a genuine chance. Emmett Flynn was a big director before he got into that trouble. When talking about it, Flynn refers to it as "that trouble." He was at the big house known as San Quentin, he was on a road gang, and now he is out on parole. "When you write about it," says Flynn, "please give Jack Warner the thanks. If it wasn't for him, I wouldn't be out. I had to have a job to be released, and he took me and put me on a weekly payroll here."

Flynn wanders about the Warner studio, getting acquainted with the new stars and picture making again. He has been promised a chance to direct in about two or three months. He was a successful director before that trouble. He directed the original movie production of "A Connecticut Yankee," "East Lynne," "The Man Who Came Back" and "The Count of Monte Cristo," to mention only a few. He was getting a salary of $3,500 a week. Now his salary, but that doesn't matter—it's a weekly salary. He's out among people he knows, and he has a fighting chance to come back. He is directing himself and playing the lead in a human everyday story, which will be called "The Man Who Came Back." This was once his big success, and now—well, he's out trying and hoping.

Grace Moore is recording the song, "Love Me Forever," for the picture of that name in the very setting in which you will see her sing it on the screen. She is in her apartment and playing the piano in this same apartment, but out of the focus of the camera, is another piano. Here Director Victor Schertzinger sits playing the musical accompaniment. Schertzinger wrote the song, "Love Me Forever," and he always plays his own music when Miss Moore records it. Grace Moore finishes singing, and her husband, Valentin Parera, waves his head to show that he wasn't satisfied. He is not only her husband, but her severest music critic. However, in a few minutes Miss Moore will be able to be her own critic. The playback will be ready and she will be able to sit on the set, listen to herself sing and judge for herself. Pictures have their advantage over the stage and the opera.

The man in the sound booth gives the signal that he is ready, Grace Moore sits in a chair. Grace Moore, from the sound booth, starts singing "Love Me Forever." It is interesting to watch Grace Moore listening to Grace Moore singing. She moves in her chair. Her eyes light up when she hits a difficult note correctly. Her

LOCOMOTIVES GIVEN NAMES

NEW YORK, N. Y., April 28 — It has become traditional in England, writes a correspondent of the New York Sun, to bestow names on locomotives, but it has become possible to escape embarrassing appeals from communities afflicted with odd names by employing the names of kings, castles, ancestral halls, regiments, famous schools, some notable individuals and pioneer locomotives.

The legion of adult and juvenile train fans or hobbyists in England would have much of their enthusiasm quenched if the principal passenger train engines were known only by numbers. Of the Royal Scot class of engine on the London, Midland and Scottish at least 43 will eventually be named after regiments with the approval of the War Office. Two of the most powerful engines bear the names of territorial regiments. One is the "Queen's Westminster Rifleman," and the other the "Civil Service Rifleman." Several of the regiments have requested that the regimental crest be mounted on the engine named after them.

Where it is possible the railway company, when transporting a regiment, uses the engine bearing that regiment's name. In the near future 10 engines of a powerful new class, the "Princess Royal," will be in use on this railway's lines. Among the more up-to-date types on the Southern Railway are the King Arthur class, which includes the Knights of the Round Table, and the public schools' class, which includes an engine named "Westminster" and another the "Winchester".

DUCHESS OF KENT TO STAY IN THE GREEK CHURCH

LONDON, April 30—The Duchess of Kent, the former Princess Marina of Greece, who moved this week into her new home in London, apparently intends to remain an active member of the Greek orthodox church, despite the fact that she now belongs to the British Royal family.

She went alone yesterday to London's only Greek church on the eve of the Greek Good Friday. For nearly three hours she sat in an attitude of devotion while the priests sang Byzantine chants. She knelt and kissed the archbishop's hand, then the cross as she left.

Her fingers toy with her chin. When the song is over, she agrees with her husband. She goes back to the piano to record it again. This procedure continues for over an hour. Miss Moore is singing this song in a low G, the lowest she ever sang. She is practically crooning. At last, Grace Moore, listening to Grace Moore sing, is satisfied. This is the take you will hear. Miss Moore explained the selection. "If I feel the same emotion listening to the song," said Grace Moore, "that I feel while singing it, then it's good."

"Famous Babies" Health Series on CBS

Expert advice and discussion on problems in child health will be brought to the audience of the WABC-Columbia network each Monday from 11:00 to 11:15 A. M., A. S. T., beginning April 29, in a new series of programs entitled "Famous Babies". The quarter-hour broadcasts will be conducted by Dr. Louis I. Harris, former health commissioner of New York City and a health authority of recognized reputation here and abroad.

During the series, Dr. Harris will present as his guests noted parents who will discuss their own problems in maintaining and improving the health of their offspring. On other occasions, he will reverse this procedure and present the parents of celebrated children.

Dr. Harris has devoted himself to 2 decades of distinguished service in New York City health activities. During his regime as the city's health commissioner, from 1926 to 1928, Dr. Harris laid the foundation for present-day scientific methods used by great municipalities throughout the nation in combatting diphtheria. Another outstanding highlight of his administration was his enforcement of milk ordinances which have proved of inestimable value in safeguarding child health.

Dr. Harris will be assisted in the program by Louis A. Witten, well known radio advertising executive.

"The only way to find a comfortable house in Hollywood is to find a movie star whose contract has not been renewed," says Harry Conn, Jack Benny's script writer who went to the West Coast with him.

THE RHUBARB IS UP!

The first out-door grown rhubarb is a headliner on the vegetable counters this month, vying with the cherry-colored hot-house stalks. Though always higher in price, for the first two or three weeks of its season, rhubarb is truly one of Nature's own spring tonics and it is well worth its cost, at least as an extra flourish for a Sunday or company dinner. Is there anything more enticing than a flaky-crust rhubarb pie, running over with rose-colored juices? Or a baked rhubarb dumpling?

RHUBARB PIE

Line a pie plate with pastry. To two large cups of rhubarb, cut in inch lengths, add one cup sugar, juice of half a lemon, and the well-beaten yolks of two eggs, with half a teaspoon of salt. Turn the mixture into the pastry lined plate, brush the edges of the pastry with cold water, cover with a layer of pastry and let bake until done.

Two aristocrats of the vegetable family are beginning their spring season, asparagus and artichoker. The markets are gala with fresh spring supplies of vegetables, but economy lies the way of the staid vegetables still wearing sack-cloth, winter cabbage, potatoes, parsnips and onions. Spinach is higher priced. The heyday of the cauliflower season will be over next month, and it is well to use this vegetable frequently while there is still a choice of firm, snow-white heads. A cauliflower is one of the prettiest vegetables to serve, if steamed in the head without disturbing the flowerettes, and served entire in a deep dish or casserole with a thick, creamy cheese sauce. New, freshly-ground horseradish has made its appearance on the spring counters.

RHUBARB SAUCE

Delicious rhubarb sauce. Wash rhubarb, with scissors cut into piece about an inch long, (without peeling, using:—

3 cups rhubarb
1 cup sugar
2 cups water

Boil a few minutes; when soft, remove, the fire. Let cool. Too long cooking takes from the flavour.

When strawberries are still expensive an economic as well as delicious sauce can be made by using one box of berries with twice the quantity of rhubarb.

HOUSEHOLD USES FOR SALT

There are many little kitchen tricks that make housework easier and many of them are very simple. If the iron seems rough and dirty, just when the clothes are all ready for ironing, sprinkle some salt on a newspaper and rub the hot iron over it. It will be like new. When washing, too, if you discover clothes or sheets with iron rust or ink stains, these may be easily removed by a mixture of salt and lemon juice.

TEMPERAMENT

By an almost superhuman exercise of will power this column has kept from saying anything snarky about this superhuman bridge battle being carried on 'twixt the Culbertsons and the Sims.

But that hit in Tuesday's News is just a little too much. It seems the Culbertson nerves are fraying, the stress of keen competition is taking its toll, Ely is getting touchy—or else he has a corn.

Anyway, the piece in the paper said that Ely claimed P. Hal Sims was taking up too much room under the table with his feet. This irked Ely to the point where he claimed that Hal's pavement-pounders had heckled him out of several rubbers.

Further than that, Ely got right down and drew a chalk line under the table, dividing the pedal territory of Hal from Ely. Separating the sheep from the goats as it were. Peace descended on the feet after that—for a few moment, only to have Ely snarl that Hal was poaching again. It looked like trouble until Mrs. Culbertson came out with the announcement that the offending tootsies in this case were affixed to her ankles.

You can't help thinking that there are too many feet under that table. The presumption is that Mrs. Sims is sitting tailor-fashion.

This situation proves what I've always suspected—that even topnotch contract fiends play bridge with their feet.

It also indicates that the tension goes pretty keen in contact, even as it does in football, or base ball, or salesmanship, or anything else where the competition gets sharp.

The methods used by various men to meet competition in the best competitive frame of mind are varied. One pretty big business man I know won't go into an important conference wearing clothes he has worn before.

The day of the conference he decks himself out, from head to foot, in brand new clothing. He says this brings him a feeling of assurance.

Tom Curtin, author of the Black Chamber stories, received this letter from a farmer in Vermont. "I think your program is great. I always let my kids listen to it because it is thrilling and exciting. It is also hair-raising, which makes it very easy for me when I have to give the kids haircuts."

TORONTO, April 29—An unidentified woman, about 26 years old, was instantly killed today when, a witness said, she threw herself in front of a Canadian National Railways train here.
