THE EXHIBITION

Those who have so far visited the Exhibition are delighted with what they have seen in the different departments.

The Fredericton Exhibition this year surpasses in every way any previous exhibition in recent years. The different booths are neatly arranged and the displays both inside and outside the building show the result of care and attention. Much favourable comment has been heard by the visitors from out of town. Many of these say that Fredericton can hand it out to any other place in the way of handling fairs.

The free out-door attractions this year are the best ever seen in this city and are alone well worth the entire price of the admission to the exhibition.

The Daily Mail has been criticised by some of the directors of the Exhibition because we can not agree with everything that they do and say. The Daily Mail reserves the right to conduct our paper as we see fit without any dictation from the directors of the Fredericton Exhibition, none of whom know anything about newspaper work or its needs. These directors, however, do know how to get up an exhibition. They made a fizzle of it last year for some reason but this year they worked hard and they have succeeded in putting before the public the best exhibition it is possible to have anywhere. Congratulations.

MR. BENNETT LAST NIGHT

Balm of Gilead for St. James Street poured in unbroken stream over Trans-Canada radio network last night, as Premier Bennett reassured capitalists of Canada that Capitalism was not doomed, that he still stands for sound money, that there will be no "rubber" dollars. "You must understand me now and for all time as declaring against any action that will destroy the capitalism system," said Mr. Bennett. In his broadcast last January Mr. Bennett said, "We will examine the system without prejudice of any sort. If it has failed, we must change it." Last night he said, "Capitalism should be treated fairly. When it goes wrong, as it has gone wrong, it must be corrected." Then for Montreal-Toronto listeners he added, "When it goes right might it not be applauded." He then proceeded to warn his listeners that "a determined effort has been made by the arch enemy of capitalism to destroy it." He didn't say who the arch enemy was. Then he added, "In your own interest, resist that influence." Mr. Bennett referred to systems of credits, of his opponents proposing systems that would not work theoretically nor actually "by visionaries tossed hither and thither without purpose and without plan, moved fitfully by every wind that blows."

The only difference between Mr. Bennett and Mr. Aberhart was that on Monday Bennett promised a monthly pension to every man over sixty who wanted to quit work, and Mr. Aberhart promised a monthly credit to every man who would work. Mr. Bennett last night receded still further from his arrogant declarations of 1930-31. Then he was against inflation, and insisted that faith must be kept in payment of interest. Last night he even admitted he might be for "controlled" inflation and that present interest rates under present conditions might verge on usury. He paid substantial interest rates to chartered banks a few years ago on $5,000,000 of treasury notes he might have financed with little controlled inflation. He turned thumbs down last session on proposals to limit interest to be charged on insurance policy loans, the safest loans extant. Mr. Bennett also prepared for an about face on the matter of public ownership of the Bank of Canada. The Liberal policy of public ownership has been generally accepted and Mr. Bennett admitted last night that if it could be shown that publicly owned banks would serve public interests better, then it would be publicly owned. Hitherto he had asserted positively that private ownership was the only thing. The Conservative leader charged the Liberal leader with speaking on the monetary policy only from a party interest; that he spoke from experience.

Mr. King was Prime Minister for nine years and his Finance Ministers were among the greatest Canada has known: Fielding, Robb and Dunning, with Ralston as financial adviser in the last five years. Mr. Bennett was Premier for five years. Mr. King's Finance Ministers reduced the national debt and repaid maturing loans out of the revenue. Mr. Bennett's loans have nearly all been refunded and the nations debt has increased.

Mr. Bennett with his customary modesty admitted he had done a good job. He admitted they were only realists and all others theorists, and that he was the only reformer. Mr. Bennett then sought to prove he had kept his promises of 1930. In five years in parliament he was never able to do it. He would have been checked immediately by the Opposition. Last night alone in his little broadcasting room he did it, because there was nobody to talk back. First he claimed he had protected agriculture and industry and the consumers from exploitation. He forgot the revelations of the price spreads commission, and of conditions during his regime. Second, he referred to his pledge to foster agriculture, so badly neglected before he undertook to foster it. Agriculture has been worse off under his protection than under Liberal neglect (?). His third reference was the pledge for the stabilization of economic conditions, the continuity of trade and freedom from manipulation of home and foreign tariffs. The latest examples of his success (?) in this is the trade war with Japan due to his manipulation of foreign tariffs, and the failure to get a reciprocity treaty with the United States. In the correspondence he published Monday, Cordell Hull, U. S. Secretary of State wrote: "I suggest that to the proposed outline of discussions there be added question of methods of determining the value of merchandise for duty purposes, in either country a matter which I consider of importance in the proposed negotiations. Every business man in Canada has cursed these fluctuating valuations. On old age pensions Mr. Bennett indicated that half a pledge was better than no pledge. Finally with his usual exaggeration, Mr. Bennett intimated that the Liberal policy will result in Canada's utter bankruptcy. Just another promise he knows will never eventuate.

See the out-door attractions at the Exhibition this week. They are the best yet.

Aberdeen Street residents are still making a fuss about the conditions out there.

A sad case has come to our attention. A very talkative lady of our acquaintance whose husband has been injured says that it is hard to get along on $30.00 per month, "conversation", money. We agreed it didn't seem enough.

The future premier with vision to what may happen is looking the whole province over in regard to the girl question. At 12:30 he goes to Diblee's Corner to see the P. N. S. girls. Thus he revives old conditions.

There is a commendable absence of fakirs in the city just now.

A scientist again says that flies are "more numerous around pink barns". So farmers do not paint your barn pink.

A man at the exhibition yesterday saw the sign "Exit" and said that he wanted to see that exhibit before he left the building.

Freak executive. A man who was lucky enough to hire a good office.

We doubt if there was more natural vivacity in Grandma's day. It was merely that the young had to sit on horsehair furniture.

The best policy is a place for everything and everything in its place. This is especially true of college professors.

It pays to advertise in The Daily Mail.

government the matter of financial assistance in a small way for the association. Such assistance would be money well spent, he thought.

Rev. Dr. Wightman enquired whether any investigation was being made as to the cause of death of young salmon on sand bars below Grand Falls, which, he understood, was a result of the gates of the Grand Falls dam being closed over the week-ends.

George H. Scott, acting provincial Boy Scout commissioner, gave a review of the Junior forest warden work done in New Brunswick.

Mr. Young moved that the association go on record as being in favor of co-operating with the Boy Scout Association in furthering the junior forest warden movement. Seconded by Mr. Grattan, the resolution was adopted unanimously.

George Whalen, Boiestown, thought a survey should be made in the vast forest area north of Boiestown to find out why there was a depletion of moose in that area.

At the banquet, last evening, Dr. E. H. Cook, St. Stephen, president, proposed the toast to the King. He also extended a welcome to the guests.

Sidney C. Young, Saint John proposed the toast to the City of Fredericton. Mayor W. G. Clark replied, welcoming the delegates officially. He spoke of the beauties of New Brunswick and of Fredericton, the capital. The wild life of the province needed to be preserved, he said.

W. K. Hay of this city, proposed a toast to the association. Rev. Dr. F. A. Wightman, of this city, responded, stating he thought the organization was growing in popularity as well as in numbers.

Premier Dwyer extolled the work of the association. Public opinion regarding the preservation of wild life in New Brunswick was changing, he thought, due to the efforts of the association.

Fish and game had more of an appeal to those from outside, perhaps, than to those in the province, except members of the association. It was difficult to overestimate the great field of recreation provided here. It would be of benefit to make this known.

"You're carrying on a great work", he declared. "A matter of this kind ought to be encouraged."

Any financial assistance which the government might give he thought would be money well spent, particularly when the association represented an army of 3,000 men, all having a keen appreciation of the wild life of the province.

G. H. Prince, deputy minister of lands and mines, was the next speaker. He expressed the regrets of Hon. F. W. Pirie, the minister, at being unable to be present. Mr. Prince complimented the organization on its record and wondered if its membership would be increased to 6,000 in ten years.

He thought formation of the advisory council for the Miramichi was a wonderful thing and that a similar council for the Saint John River would bring good results.

Forest protection from fires, still one of the greatest of unsolved problems, was a matter in which the association could take a valuable part. He wondered if junior game wardens could not be organized as well as junior forest wardens.

Mr. Prince thought there had been some increase in the number of non-resident fishermen who had been in the province this last year. The extent of open waters had been slightly increased also.

Dr. A. H. Leim, director of the biological board's station at St. Andrews, said that cod, haddock, conditions in the coastal waters, salmon, trout, oysters and scallop were matters of study and investigation, but fresh water fisheries had been given more attention during the last year by the station.

"What can we expect from natural waters?" asked Dr. Leim. The poundage of fish produced could be increased by cultivation, he explained, and

MORRO CASTLE
CHIEF WAITING

GREEN VILLAGE, N. J., Sept. 12—Time, in the last year, has stood still for Chief Officer William F. Warms, his wife and their child.

The man who was captain of the luxury liner Morro Castle during the few fateful hours on Sept. 8, 1934, when flames swept the Ward liner off Asbury Park, N. J., has not set foot on a ship since.

Warms ran away to sea when he was 14. For more than 30 years he trod the decks of vessels plowing the seven seas. Now, tied to the land, he can only await trial on charges of criminal negligence in connection with the disaster which took 124 lives.

Government authorities have restored his chief officer's papers but until he is tried, Warms cannot sail again as a master.

"I don't want to sail until I am cleared," he said.

"SILVER STOMACH" OWNER
DIES AT 103

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Sept. 11—Ferdinand Waggoner, given a "silver stomach" by surgeons 43 years ago in the hope that it would give him a few more months of life, was dead today at the age of 103.

Waggoner, said to have been the oldest man in Illinois, ate heartily and credited his "new-fangled" stomach with his longevity.

His stomach was punctured by a charge from the shotgun of a friend who stumbled over a piece of debris as they fled from the great Chicago fire in 1871.

Surgeons told him his death was a matter of only a few hours but finally decided to place silver tubes in his stomach.

VOTE OF THANKS

A delightful luncheon was served this afternoon at the Nurses' Home for the delegates attending the Hospital Association convention here. J. A. Reid, president of the Victoria Hospital Board, expressed pleasure at having the delegates present and M. E. Agar of Saint John, moved a vote of thanks to the Hospital Board for the luncheon which was unanimously carried.

one of the aims of the board was to increase production by "scientific farming" of the waters.

James Catt, Saint John, supervisor of fisheries, culture, spoke briefly, touching on the co-operation, which the association had given and could give. In some waters which were overcrowded the fish were stunted and would not grow until their numbers were reduced, he said, pointing out that a general size limit should not be set for angling purposes, but that conditions in individual cases should be considered.

Salmon and non-migratory trout in the streams emptying into the Bay of Fundy should be looked after before costly experiments in connection with stocking sea-trout were undertaken, he continued.

L. H. Parks, of this city, and A. L. Barry, Newcastle, supervisors of fisheries, spoke briefly, the former conveying the regrets of D. H. Sutherland, Halifax, N. S., chief supervisor of fisheries, at being unable to attend.

Both expressed appreciation of the co-operation given by the association. Protective work had been made easier because of this co-operation and the public opinion which the association had fostered.

G. L. Miller, chief forester, spoke of the heavy forest fire losses this year. He thought more educational work was necessary to approach the problem from the most important angle, that of fire prevention. The junior forest wardens' work was getting under way, he said. Another feature of fire prevention was the issuing of forest travel permits. He said that 6,000 seasonal permits had been issued this year. The holders of these were honorary fire wardens, he pointed out.
