DYNAMIC STORY OF AMERICAN OIL

SUNDAY NIGHT BROADCAST

A Tale of American Perseverance

"America's Hour", the Columbia network's dramatic panorama of the nation's progress, will deal with the dynamic story of American oil on Sunday, August 11, from 9:00 to 10:00 P. M., A. S. T.

From the days when the first oil drill bit through the earth at Titusville, Pennsylvania, to the country's modern leadership in petroleum production, the vivid, roaring saga of the rush of "black gold" from American soil to world markets will be depicted in a score of swift scenes.

It is another story of American discovery and perseverance; of vigorous action and far-flung organization; of scientific perfection and final world influence. Like the stories of American railroads, mining and medicine—already covered in the series—the drama of oil recaptures the driving force of American enterprise and the surging spirit of the people.

There is the story of Edwin Drake, New Haven railroad conductor, who, in 1858, seized something new and, with the help of grizzled Uncle Billy Smith, Titusville blacksmith, drilled for oil for the first time instead of merely recovering surface oil by digging trenches. They struggled through a tortuous year and a half to sink the first oil well 70 feet.

"Drake's folly" turned to gold and the country's oil rush was on. There followed a wild race by thousands of men to claim, drill and transport the precious mineral from a comparative wilderness. Wagons fought their way through quagmires with ridiculously small loads; bargemen fought and jammed their way down narrow Oil Creek to the outlets of commerce on the Allegheny River. Hundreds of men lost their lives and millions of barrels of oil vanished in the freshets.

A 23-year-old youth stood on the banks of Oil Creek and deplored the reckless waste and confusion. He resolved to connect the fields with pipelines; to establish order out of chaos; to effect large distribution and a low price. He was John D. Rockefeller.

Vast new fields opened up. American oil flowed across the seven seas. The "benzene buggy" created a new demand. The World War broke and 25,000 new American oil wells gushed to make the United States the largest producer and to inspire the remark of Lord Curzon that "the Allies floated to victory on a sea of oil".

These and other colorful episodes will be revealed in the full-hour CBS drama. The oil story, originally scheduled for last Sunday, was postponed a week in order to bring to CBS listeners a special concert by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.
