

Man on the Street

probably the majority are there for the romantic possibilities.

Romance—Old and New

There is always the chance of a dropped handkerchief or a sprained ankle. These and the runaway horse furnished most of the romantic meetings in the novels of the nineties. The men were rushing about in a great hurry, in those days, displaying their gallantry.

Today it is doubtful if a girl ever drops her handkerchief or sprains her ankle on purpose. A man lounging on one of those benches sees the right girl and says, "Hi, babe," or the girl sees the right man and shoots him a siren look that speaks volumes and there is romance ready made without all the preliminary bowing and scraping, veiled glances and stilted words.

There are plenty of girls to pick from among that large crowd, and considering the number of teachers being turned out every year, the spectators with matrimonial intention should be subsidized by some group or society.

Well, in any case, the baldheaded row have good seats, well up front. They can see the show as often as they wish. One might suggest, however, that from time to time, to add variety, a few of the girls would do a strip tease for them.

Ontario Man On Jewel Smuggling Charge At Sarnia

Walter L. Cadman, of London, Ontario, was arraigned in a magistrate's court at Sarnia, Ontario, this week, on a charge of smuggling jewelry to the value of $1,300 into Canada. With-out electing trial, Cadman was remanded until next Tuesday.

Cadman was arrested in Fredericton some days ago and taken to Ontario to face hearing after a two months' search by the R.C.M.P. The man had been in this province for about that length of time, and police picked him up on a minor offence here.

State Medicine

So you see that a large number of our sick and injured are being looked after by the state, and in all cases physicians are remunerated for the work they do for these people.

"But there are hundreds of other cases which come under what I may call a 'one-sided form of state medicine.' These cases, or many of them, are looked after by the state. They receive professional care and attention from physicians but unlike workmen's compensation and tuberculosis cases no physician receives one penny in the way of remuneration. Many of these cases are on relief, and while the state pays for food, heat and shelter, not one dollar finds its way into the pocket of the physician. Others are in hospitals, supported or partly-supported by the state, and for their care the physician goes unpaid. I am speaking now of conditions as they prevail in Saint John. I presume the same exist to a greater or lesser degree in other sections of the province."

The guest speakers were Dr. Herman Robertson, president of the Canadian Medical Association, and Dr. T. C. Routley, general secretary of the organization. Both stressed the need of closer co-operation and confederation of the societies of the various provinces into a stronger and larger national organization.

The following executive was named: Drs. Arthur VanWart, Fredericton; C. J. Veniot, M.P.-elect, Bathurst; J. F. L. Brown, Woodstock; Paul M. Atkinson, Moncton; A. A. Sormnay, Edmundston; H. S. Everett, St. Stephen, and A. E. Macaulay, Saint John; compensation committee, Drs. R. A. Hughes, Joseph Tanzman and O. B. Evans, all of Saint John; golf committee, Drs. W. E. Gray, Milltown; William Warwick, Fredericton, and A. R. Myers, Moncton.

Dr. W. E. Gray won the Dr. G. Clowes VanWart golf challenge cup for 1936 and it was presented to him at the close of the luncheon today.

This was followed by a paper by Dr. R. E. Farquharson, assistant professor of medicine, Toronto University, on "Diagnosis and Treatment of Conditions Associated with Jaundice." The morning session concluded with a paper by Dr. L. C. Montgomery, department of medicine, McGill University, on "Treatment of Pneumonia."

CANADIANA

GORDON STEADMAN SMITH
Author of "The Voice of the Waters"

The following pretty poem is a contribution of Gordon Steadman Smith, son of Rev. Steadman Smith and Mrs. Smith of Marysville. Mr. Smith is a third year student at Acadia University and has had several of his poems accepted and published in leading American and Canadian magazines. Next year he will be on the Editorial staff of the Athenaeum, the University paper of his Alma Mater.

THE VOICE OF THE WATERS

There is music in the waters of the river rushing by;
In the whirling of the eddies each bright bubble voices glee;
And the strength of many murmurings tells a message with a sigh,
Of its birth and rapid progress as it nears the calling sea.

"I was once a little brooklet moving slowly on my way:
Then each hour was filled with promise, happily I faced the new;
What a brilliance filled the meadow! Oh, the sweetness of the day
When there came the time to harvest the tall grasses which I grew!

"Then one day the scene was darkened, all the sky was overcast,
And the rain that fell in torrents added swiftness to my flight;
It was then I called in gladness to the many friends I passed!
It was then I felt contentment and rejoiced at each new sight!

"Soon I grew in size and power and felt glad that I was strong:
How I looked back to the meadow, to the time when I was small!
How I marvelled at the power of my ever-present song
And found hope for future blessings in the ocean's stirring call!

"But when I became a river rushing onward to the sea,
When I found that I was mighty yet was powerless to rest,
It was then in disappointment that I roared consistently
'Make me once again a brooklet that sees beauty at its best.'"

There is music in the waters through a race so quickly run;
In the ever-growing fury of the forces there is fate;
For the swiftly-moving river when its course is nearly done
May attempt to slow its progress and, alas, will be too late!
—Gordon Steadman Smith.

An Extensive

stated the deputy attorney-general, and so far in the province the machines have been well under control. Mr. Dickson, of course, referred to places other than where the recent seizures have been made.

Fredericton Clear

Fredericton is clear of these gambling devices ever since the local police made a raid on the operators about two years ago, stated the chief of the local force when asked this morning if any action similar to that in the other cities would be taken.

In Moncton the police force there conducted the raid itself while in Saint John the R.C.M.P. assisted the civic police in the seizures. From the department of the attorney-general it was learned today that with the exception of the enforcement of the Intoxicating Liquor Act all enforcement is left in the hands of the civic authorities. In some cases however the R.C.M.P. are asked for assistance and it is granted. The reason for this is to guard against overlapping of authority and consequent fumbling of justice.
