Greenwood and Sir Archibald Sinclair respectively, both demanded to know what was happening in the Balearic Islands where the Italians were said to be securing control.

Launching the debate, Foreign Secretary Eden defended the Portuguese government against Russian charges of Spanish neutrality violation.

"Not a single case of the Soviet charges against the Portuguese government has been proved," he told the House of Commons as it reassembled after the summer recess.

"The chief complaint against the workings of the non-intervention agreement in Soviet Russia," Eden continued, "which charges Portugal with infringement."

"We have no information whatsoever to support the Soviet charges. Nor has the non-intervention committee been able to support any single one of the Soviet charges against the Portuguese government."

Eden asserted Britain would hold fast to the non-intervention pact despite opposition from Labor groups.

"Supplies sent from this country," he said, "would not have had an important bearing on result in Spain."

Turning to face Labor leaders who have pressed for direct aid, he declared:

"What you are asking is that the French and our own government who worked all through the weeks of August and September to try to get the committee going, should destroy what has been done, and, when they had destroyed it, Soviet Russia would be left master of the field."

"The government has no intention of lending itself to anything of this kind. The mere fact that all nations still are members of the committee only shows that Europe believes this non-intervention policy is the right policy to pursue."

A storm of protest arose when Wm. Gallacher, Communist, declared: "I wouldn't believe Eden on a stack of Bibles," referring to the foreign secretary's assertion that France had taken the initiative in the non-intervention pact.

Gallacher continued his speech with a violent attack on Joachim von Ribbentrop, newly appointed German ambassador to London.

Von Ribbentrop, he said, comes to England "with his hands red with murder and I demand this man, who is not an ambassador but an agent for war, should be driven out of this country."

Warning Labor members not to "out-Soviet the Soviet," Eden held the pact had not, as had been charged, worked to the advantage of the insurgents against the legally constituted Spanish government.

The opposition demanded that the government permit British sale of arms to Spain was led by Arthur Greenwood, Labor front-bencher.

Half a dozen Labor leaders then took the floor in vigorous denunciations of the government's stand.

Cries of "Butchers! Murderers!" were heard frequently.

The house reassembled after the long recess in an inquisitive mood. When the question paper was exhausted, private notices of questions were showered on the ministers. Every bench was packed. In the crowded gallery for distinguished visitors Prime Minister Mackenzie King of Canada sat with Hon. Vincent Massey, Canadian high commissioner in London.

Eden told the whole story of the international agreement on non-intervention. He sharply denied that the French initiative in proposing the agreement last August was the result of British pressure. The purpose of the agreement was not to help one side or the other in Spain but to prevent civil war from crossing the frontiers and involving the whole of Europe.

He praised the initiative of the Blum government as "an act of rare courage." He challenged the view taken by certain critics that the agreement worked to the disadvantage of the Madrid government. At the opening of the civil war, Eden said, the insurgents were in a better position than the Madrid government with regard to the supply of arms and equipment. They likewise were better disciplined.

The British government had not for one single second entertained such a proposal "nor have we any evidence to support the Soviet charges against Portugal. . . . There is no first hand evidence that Portugal has broken the agreement," Eden pressed.

No Money

some discussion on the idea of having a travelogue for New Brunswick in technicolor. Wardens of the various counties and Boards of Trade have been notified of the project and all are in favor of it. The idea is to get the provincial government work with the federal government to have one produced. The idea is to have "shorts" taken of New Brunswick scenes, to be shown in all Canadian and U. S. theatres. Mr. Miller said that Louis B. Mayer of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer had evinced an interest in his native province of New Brunswick and would "do something" to have New Brunswick filmed.
Mr. Hanson thought the bureau at Ottawa looked after such activities. He thought it might be too expensive to have outside sources at work on it. The provincial bureau is "fathering" the idea and "our work is to start it along," said Mr. Miller. That it was a matter for the provincial government was the general opinion of those present.
It was suggested that hunting scenes be used, although Mr. Hodge objected to too much of this, since it led outsiders to believe that everything was "wild life" in this part of the country.
Dinner Meeting Soon
The matter of a dinner meeting of the Board of Trade was brought up and it was left to the president and the entertainment committee to arrange for within a week or two. S. G. Mooney, vice-president of the Maritime Board of Trade, and Hon. F. W. Pirie, minister of lands and mines, will be invited to the banquet. At that time it is expected that the matter of a National Park for New Brunswick will be discussed. Mr. Hodge suggested that the park be in Queens county rather than in Albert or at Mount Carleton, since it was more accessible and would mean visitors would come to this section of the province. Mr. Palmer suggested that there shouldn't be too much heckling about the matter. "Tell them to build one as soon as they can and advise Hon. Mr. Pirie to do his best and go ahead with it," advised Mr. Palmer.
A report of receipts and expenditures will be given at the dinner meeting. It was intimated by President Miller that the board is in need of funds and dues from members. He said that the new tourist bureau had been paid for completely. He pointed out that the Credit Bureau collections were away off also.

generous. Actually, who have only three and one-half to the square mile—not enough to have a game of bridge, without borrowing half a person from another square mile. And that's bad," he thought.

Mr. Sandwell said something should be done to bring the best people to Canada. We would have to produce in Canada that which would be attractive to the rest of the world.

"And we are not going to make a very good job of it unless we maintain a Canada of tolerance—a country of the utmost freedom of thought—a Canada of the utmost freedom of action, except where such freedom infringes on the right of others," he declared.

"The producers of Canada—meaning you who rule, have got to produce an article that the advertising departments of the country can sell to the world."

Former Premier

A keen politician, Hon. T. C. Norris brought many advances in legislation to Manitoba. During his term as premier women first received the franchise, minimum wage laws were introduced and prohibition was adopted.

He was a son of Arthur and Phoebe Norris, both from pioneer families of Irish ancestry. He was educated in the public schools and as a boy went west with his parents to settle on a farm at Griswold, near Brandon.
