Landon Urges

on a pay-as-you-go basis, Governor Landon said.

The Republican Presidential nominee devoted more than half his speech to a critical examination of the compulsory old-age insurance plan to which employees will begin making their contributions in equal amounts next January. He attacked not only the huge reserve fund, eventually to be built up to $47,000,000,000 out of these contributions, but the underlying principle of compulsory savings as well. This plan, he said, is based on the assumption that a stern, paternal government must force people to save for their old age, regardless of their incomes. His plan, he said, is based on the different principle that in an industrial nation some people are unable to provide for their old age and that it is the duty of society to take care of them.

Proposes a Visible Tax

Governor Landon did not say how large a pension he proposed to pay under his plan. Elaborate computations had been prepared for him, he said, but he did not want to repeat the errors of haste made in the drafting of the present act. His plan would be cheaper than the contributory system he asserted, because no reserve fund would be accumulated. He proposed that the funds for old-age pensions should be raised by an ear-marked tax which would be direct and visible and widely distributed.

The chief criticisms of the compulsory old-age insurance system made by Governor Landon were these: It covers only one-half the working population. No one will receive a pension under it until 1942. It is not as advantageous to an insured worker as it might seem, since an individual would have to earn $125 a month every month for twenty years to earn a pension of $27.50 a month. Although the tax ostensibly will be paid equally by the worker and the employer, it will, in fact, be paid entirely by the worker or by the consumer through higher prices. A small wage or salary earner cannot afford to pay $6 out of every $100 of his earnings into the insurance fund—yet this is the amount that eventually will be taken from him through the tax on himself and his employer.

New Nazi

tightening up the efficiency of its reserve fleet was indicated in an administrative change contained in the official navy list issued tonight. Hitherto units of the reserve fleet under command of Vice-Admiral G. C. Dickens have been maintained at varying stages of readiness for active service. Some were at "standard notice," that is available for service in fourteen days. Others were at "extended notice," meaning not ready for four months.

Now, however, all effective ships of the reserve fleet are listed at standard notice. This means that 10 cruisers, 22 flotilla leaders and destroyers, an aircraft carrier, 11 mine sweepers, besides various patrol craft, could be made ready for the sea inside of two weeks.

Jack Shea and

on Great Show

Jack Shea and His National Radio Amateurs, direct from station WEAF, New York, and featuring NBC amateur winners called on Fredericton last night and put on a grand show at the Opera House, which attracted a bumper crowd. The performance which included everything from a "torch" singer to a contortionist, was a top-notch one and was spiced by Jack Shea's sparkling announcements and magnetic stage presence. Certainly Jack Shea brought "them out of the radio and onto the stage" last night. The cowboy and hillbilly numbers were especially good. Mr. Shea

New Vaccines

process, shows super-immunizing effects on animals susceptible to human flu.

The vaccine work and other flu discoveries were reported by Dr. Wilson George Smillie, Professor of Public Health Administration at Harvard.

The vaccine at Rockefeller Institute is a culture of virus taken directly from human influenza patients. Flu is believed to attack through the nose. This vaccine is injected under the skin.

It is a complete protection, Dr. Smillie said, for mice, ferrets and swine, which catch human flu. The human beings vaccinated were not afterward exposed to flu. They were not, however, made ill by the vaccine and their blood revealed immunizing substances coming from the vaccination.

The English vaccine is made somewhat like smallpox vaccine, by inoculating animals with the flu virus and taking the vaccine from the animals. The workers use horses for this purpose.

The English "hyper-immune" produce, Dr. Smillie said, is so potent it mitigates the effects of flu in mice even seventy-two hours after they have been infected with the disease. The "epidemic influenza" for which the new vaccine is made, said Dr. Smillie, is a different disease from sporadic cases of flu.

"The workers in this field," he concluded, "hope that it may be possible to produce artificially an active immunity in human beings against the virus of epidemic influenza. It seems probable that such an immunity would be of short duration, but that it might be renewed by appropriate means."
