Annual Dinner F'ton City Club Enjoyable And Well Attended

J. D. Palmer, President, Pays Tribute to Judiciary and Mounties

Major Bruce Relates Travels in Arctic Circle

Chief Justice Baxter Says Lawyers in Dominion Follow British Tradition

About one hundred members and guests at the annual dinner of the Fredericton City Club were carried to the far north country last night by an inspiring talk by Major W. E. Bruce, the Superintendent of the Fredericton Division of the R.C.M.P. Major Bruce told of his vast experience in the Arctic country and exploded the myth of the "Blonde Eskimo." This, he said, was a headline story concocted by enterprising reporters from a chance remark of the Arctic explorer Stefansson that certain Eskimos had "blonde characteristics." The only blonde natives might be albinos or gray haired old men. The speaker told many interesting facts about the life of the eastern Eskimos, who in the years 1915-1917 had never seen a white man. He carried his audience over the barren land and ice floes, and made the many well-fed members and guests shiver to hear of men who never eat vegetables, never build fires in winter, wear caribou skins for raiment, live freely and love freely, sometimes four or five husbands per wife.

CHIEF JUSTICE J. B. M. BAXTER Represented Judiciary at City Club Dinner

J. D. Palmer, president of the club, presided at the banquet, and welcomed the guests. He was more than delighted to have new, bright, progressive members present. The future of the club depends on the younger generation, he said. The 53 ordinary and 24 privileged members should be built up to 100 members, and so insure a greater revenue to be available for more services, he pointed out.

Tobias Weissman, of New York City, presented the club with a check for $50 and was made an honorary member.

Mr. Palmer introduced Hon. J. B. M. Baxter, Chief Justice of New Brunswick, and complimented the Judiciary of New Brunswick on being equal to any in Canada. Hon. Mr. Baxter thanked him on behalf of the judiciary, and remarked that the judiciary carry on their duties efficiently and in accordance with the interest of the province, following the British tradition. He expressed appreciation of the club and its friendly (Continued on Page Four)

Premier Dysart's Day

HON. A. A. DYSART IF THERE is any man at the head of any provincial government who does more work than Hon. A. A. Dysart, premier of New Brunswick, The Daily Mail would like to hear about it. During the past year and a half since Mr. Dysart has assumed the premiership of the Province, he has been in Fredericton the most of his time. Any ordinary man working for the provincial government would put up a big kick if he were obliged to work as many hours a day and night as our present Premier. Mr. Dysart generally arrives in Fredericton from his home at Buctouche on Monday afternoon. He immediately goes to his office and his afternoon's work lasts until about 6.30 p.m. He then goes to the Queen Hotel where between talking with people who are waiting to see him and answering local and long distance telephone calls, he manages to have his dinner and return to the Departmental Building about 7.30 or 8 p.m. Here he is engaged with his efficient secretary, Mr. R. A. Tweedie, until one o'clock in the morning and sometimes later. This routine continues on the following day. On Wednesday when the executive council meets Mr. Dysart does all this work over again, in addition to attending the cabinet meeting. It often happens that these meetings last until nearly two o'clock on the following morning. This continues on Thursday and Friday of the same week. On Saturday morning the premier shows up at breakfast about 8.30 a.m. as bright and cheerful as if he had gone to bed at ten o'clock at night. Sometimes he goes to his home in Buctouche on Saturday afternoon, at other times he continues work until midnight.

During the present week Premier Dysart has been confined to his room with a heavy cold. When some of his friends called on the premier yesterday afternoon he was sitting up in bed with some bottles of medicine on one side of him and his private secretary on the other side. On his knee he was holding nearly one hundred letters, which he was reading, and dictating answers to his secretary. Between times he was interrupted by various telephone calls over the telephone at his bedside. One man remarked that he would not take the job of premier of New Brunswick and do the work that Allison Dysart is doing for $15,000 a year—and Mr. Dysart's salary is much below that figure.

In fact, his combined salaries of premier, minister of public works and member of the provincial legislature would not run half of that figure. It is too bad the Province of New Brunswick is not in the position to pay the members of the government an adequate salary for the work which they are doing. This applies to the members of the cabinet as well as the premier. It is doubtful if in the history of the province any government has had more meetings and devoted more time to the public business than does the present executive. In an experience around the seat of government extending for 30 years, the writer does not remember any government which devoted so much time to the public business as has the present administration, since it was sworn into office July 16, 1935.

With all his hard work, Premier Dysart always seems to be in good humor. He always has a pleasant smile, and a kindly word for those who call upon him and in his leisure moments there is no more companionable man. He can tell a pleasant joke and they are always clean. He is an ideal host and while keeping up the dignity of his position in the proper manner, he is not narrow enough to be high hat.

He has a happy home life and an ideal wife and family. As the wife of the head of the affairs of the Province, Mrs. Dysart has done and is doing her part to help her husband carry out the manifold duties of his position. During her residence in Fredericton last winter Mrs. Dysart made hosts of warm friends amongst all classes in the community. The personal friends of Premier and Mrs. Dysart are not confined to any political party. They have sincere admirers everywhere.

In reply to the announcement made yesterday by General Franco that his next move would be the blockade of Barcelona the British Ambassador has asked for time to remove British ships and to protect British interests before action is taken. Since Britain has not recognized the insurgent government she will not tolerate the searching of British vessels by insurgent warships.

LONDON, Nov. 19—Great Britain prepared yesterday to ensure freedom of passage for her ships in Spanish waters while Foreign Secretary Eden told the House of Commons he considered there were other governments more blameworthy than those of Italy and Germany for violations of the hands-off Spain pact.

Aroused by opposition jibes, Eden said: "As far as non-intervention is concerned I can say categorically that I think there are other governments more to blame than those of Italy and Germany."

His statement, which some members took to be a veiled thrust at Russia, threw the House into an uproar. Cheers from the government benches mingled with the cries of "Shame! Shame!" from the Labor M. P.'s.

Eden ignored subsequent heckling, and avoided further definition of the "other governments."

The three questions which occupied most of the parliamentary debate today were the status of British shipping in the Mediterranean in the face of General Francisco Franco's reported warning of a blockade; the future of the non-intervention committee;
