Paint and Taxes

Do the city assessors encourage a man to paint and improve his house when they make new paint and shingles a matter of increased taxation? Paint adds to the appearance of a street or of a town. The chairman of the Board of Assessors states that the people who paint and repair their homes will not be required to pay increased taxes as a result. The Broadcaster, discussing the matter, says:

In regard to taxes there has been a tendency in some communities to increase valuations as soon as new paint goes on. This was a flaw in the taxation system which should not exist. A person paying for house painting, generally speaking, takes the money out of current earnings. This is especially true of the man who owns and lives in his own home. When taxes are increased because of new paint the houseowner is paying double, for he is already paying on income, which is again assessed when the money is put into paint.

This double taxation system still persists in regard to automobiles. If a person buys a car on the instalment plan, he pays taxes on the value of the car, while he continues to pay on the money as it comes to him from income. Similar conditions exist in the taxation of various properties.

So far as painting and repairs are concerned there are good reasons why they should be encouraged. They add to the appearance of the city and help to give visitors a good impression.

Well-painted dwellings are real assets to any community, but the citizens should not stop there. They should take pride in the appearance of their front-yards and back-yards too. Then they should see that the public services are functioning properly, and they can do this if they will take an interest in civic affairs and lend their assistance whenever and wherever possible to make their community more progressive and a better place in which to live.

Tourists Not Motorists

There is perhaps a tendency to think of tourist statistics as relating wholly to automobile traffic comments the Woodstock Sentinel-Review. The fact is that 29.5 cents of every tourist dollar spent in Canada comes from visitors entering from the United States by rail or steamer, and a little more than five cents of each dollar is attributed to tourists from the overseas countries. Thus more than one-third of the total expenditure is made by other than motor tourists.

A detailed statement of Canada's tourist trade in 1935 was issued by the bureau of statistics only the other day. It shows total expenditure of $201,027,000 compared with $129,974,000 in 1934. Outlay of motor tourists from the United States is estimated at $131,806,000 compared with $86,259,000, and that of visitors from the United States by rail and steamer at $59,104,000, compared with $34,260,000. In reference to the latter group, it is noted: "The results of last year's questionnaire suggest that the estimates for this class for previous years have been somewhat low."

"Last year for the first time," it is explained, "some direct information as to the expenditures of tourists travelling between the United States and Canada by rail and steamer was obtained by the United States Department of Commerce and this Bureau by means of questionnaires distributed through the courtesy of our respective immigration departments. The United States sample yielded an average expenditure rate of $67.73 which, applied to the number of tourists in this class, 872,641, gives a resultant expenditure estimate of $59,104,000."

Estimated expenditures of Canadian tourists to the United States by rail or steamer showed a still greater rate of increase, from $13,988,000 to $24,592,000.

The estimated average expenditure of -67.73 for U. S. tourists coming to Canada by rail or steamer is more than four times as great as for the 48-hour automobile trippers who constitute the largest single class of tourists. The increase of nearly 100,000 persons last year in the former class is a very substantial gain, probably reflecting the result of special efforts by the Canadian Travel Bureau, established in 1934, as well as advertising of Canada's attractions by the railway and steamship companies.

Lifting of Sanctions

While many righteous and sincere people will deplore the lifting of sanctions against Italy and contend that this murderous and shameless nation should be commercially and socially cut off from all League nations the fact remains that the cost of such action has to be given first consideration. With the signing of the armistice ending hostilities in the Great War there were those who said that the allied forces should have continued their drive and made the Germans pay with their blood. But who would have dared? Allied soldiers, who were longing for the sound of peace, would have been part of the price and the other part would have been German boys who were just as anxious to get home to loved ones and who were not by any means the personal enemies of those across from them. It has been said that there never was a bad peace nor a good war.

Italy has sinned against humanity. The world today is not calling for more war. Rather the cry is for a permanent peace. Death and destruction do not, the world has found out, usher in happier times. They only add to the summation of world troubles.

Our statesmen have been quite unanimous in favoring the lifting of Italian sanctions. To be sure Italy is escaping punishment, but it is not Italy that is being given the major consideration. It is humanity in general. What divides the nations asunder is bad for humanity.—Truro News.

SNAPSHOTS

Most crusades for reform are like kicking the cat. They don't get anywhere, but they relieve the feelings. The Daily Mail's crusades have, however, proved successful in very many instances.

You can't discredit the Supreme Court in a land where everybody is taught to abide by the Empire's decision.

Most of us are like the Chinese, eager to have our wrongs righted if somebody else will do it.

Men—even political chiefs—never are satisfied. In Ontario the new Provincial Conservative Leader Earl Rowe is demanding a general election at once, whereas Manitoba's new Conservative Leader, Erick Willis, is protesting against a general election so soon after his appointment.

It is pointed out by an alderman that the City Council may control the School Board. The City Council appoints five trustees and the provincial government four. The trouble is that the city does not take the trouble to appoint citizens who will go to the School Board and act in sympathy with the citizens' ideas of how things should be done.

A PLEASANT TIME

A number of local people are planning to go up to the Chateau Ste. Jean, near Woodstock on the evening of July 1. A local orchestra will furnish music for dancing and a pleasant time is promised to those who attend. The Chateau is beautifully situated between the river and the St. John river, and is steadily increasing in popularity. Here is a chance for a pleasant drive and a pleasant couple of hours to wind up the holiday.—a.

IMPROVES DAILEY

Improvement is noted in the condition of Mrs. Roy Hickey, of Stanley who has been seriously ill at the Victoria Public Hospital for the past two weeks. Mrs. Hickey is now believed to be out of danger.

A FORMER RESIDENT

Mrs. Daniel Toomey, and son Irvine, of Rochester, N. Y., have arrived in the city to spend a short time visiting relatives and friends in this city. Mr. Toomey was formerly Miss Nan Carton, of this city. She is being welcomed by many former acquaintances.

them in time of war, if Britain should be declared the aggressor, not to have trade with Britain?

"I want to bring this thing home, not because it is a likely thing, but because it illustrates the position of certain small nations in Europe.

"If Britain said in those circumstances, as other nations in similar cases have said, that they were wrongly adjudged the aggressor, and that the Free State was taking sides against them, and if they felt strong enough to take the procedure they wanted, they would do it.

Co-Operation Natural Course

"Is it not obvious that, dealing with any defense programme, assuming we were on friendly relations with Britain, one of the first things we should do would be to get in contact with them? To see how much assistance, in the circumstances I have indicated, they would give in their own interests?

"That defense would be planned as a whole to meet such a contingency.

"Is anyone so foolish as to think that it would not be done? Can that be done now; it cannot. But it could be done if this country were a free country, and it would be done, I am perfectly certain, by any government in a position of responsibility for defense of the country.

"We would therefore have a planned system—planned by each nation in its own interests."

After championing British Foreign Secretary Right Hon. Anthony Eden's action in urging lifting of League of Nations' sanctions against Italy, de Valera proclaimed the Irish Republican Army illegal and ordered it banned. This, too, can be considered a conciliatory gesture towards Great Britain, as the I.R.A. in the words of its leaders is "still at war with England."

Settlement Prospect / Appears : Still Remote

LONDON, June 22.—Despite periodical rumors of negotiations to settle the Anglo-Irish trade war, which has dragged on since President Eamon de Valera took office in March, 1932, the prospect of a real settlement apparently is as distant today as ever. A majority of Britons, however, have long since forgotten that the dispute even exists.

Two weeks ago, the rumor of settlement was revived when it was reported that Right Hon. Malcolm MacDonald, Dominions Secretary, had secretly opened negotiations with Dublin. But MacDonald, when questioned in the House of Commons on June 10, refused to throw any light on the question.
