Nelson in his new Gaumont-British picture which started production this week. The title of this film "The Nelson Touch," has misled certain filmgoers into believing that Arliss is filmgoers into believing that Arliss is once again venturing into history, but this is not the case. His new film is from Neil Grant's play which deals with Whitehall and trouble in the Near East and tells how a rolling other brother, a pompous, hot-headed foreign minister, from plunging into war with Arabia. He accomplishes this by what is known as 'the Nelson touch, namely, taking a risky chance a few weeks with Mrs. J. Ashfield. and somehow succeeding. Arliss plays only time in his career that he has had a co-star that can equal himself.

"Remember," adds Phil, "that it is only by constant performing to an audience that a comedian can learn timing, reaction, etc. Young comics who have had no stage experience can't get a break in radio because there is no way of reaching the executives. If audience-attended auditions were held, the youngster who is really funny could be given a sustaining programme, with an audience a pre-requisite, and after a few months of experimentation would be ready, if he were really clever, for better things."

Franz Shubert Was Temperamental, Too

If Franz Shubert were alive today he probably would make the worst song plugger along Tin Pan Alley. That's the contention of Peter Van Steeden who knows a thing or two about the confidence and persistence of the plugger gentry.

During a concert while Schubert was trying to play one of his own compositions, "Fantasie, op. 15," he was too tired to execute the necessary technique. Rather than admit his indolence, he jumped up from the piano stool and in his best German exclaimed in a rage, "That stuff is only fit for the devil to play."

Other players figured differently and advised Schubert to stick to composing. But, asks Van Steeden, can you imagine what would happen to Schubert's songs today if he himself were responsible for getting them in the Ten Best hits of the week?
