The Boy Scouts

The further encouragement by the public of the Boy Scout movement will be asked for on Apple Day, Oct. 24. The Boy Scout organization is doing a wonderful work towards promoting all that is manly and good in a boy. Think of all the fine, upstanding boys that you know. Good manly chaps with a dash of fun, who will do anything in the world for you. Then encourage their work by chipping in and helping the Apple Day movement. The Boy Scout movement is one of the best social movements in the country.

She Brags of Murder

(Moncton Transcript)

Alderman Margaret Crang, described as the youngest member of the Edmonton city council, on her return from Europe relates with evident glee an experience in Spain. While in the firing zone, she says, she "borrowed a rifle and fired two shots for the government side." Presumably she did not fire the shots in the air. If she aimed her rifle at the insurgent lines, she may by chance, if not by deliberate intent, have destroyed a human life.

It is no excuse that the lives of the insurgents were in peril from government fire. Alderman Crang was not a belligerent. She is a citizen of a nation which is not involved in the Spanish civil war. She had no more jurisdiction for her to act than if she had taken a rifle in Toronto, where she tells the story, and blazed away in Yonge street.

An ironical feature of the incident is that Alderman Crang went abroad as a delegate to a peace conference.

Possibly nothing can be done about it, but the Canadian Government certainly can do no less than refuse her a passport if this heedless woman, to put it as charitably as possible, ever feels the urge to attend another peace conference abroad. If the Spanish Fascists could lay hands on her, Canada scarcely would be in a position to protest if they stood her up in front of a firing squad.

Most people will agree that the Transcript is right. Margaret must have been a nice peace delegate. She is a beauty. She is one of the dames who likes to get her name in the papers for doing "cute things."

Esteemed in Maine

The esteem in which the late Moses Burpee, of Houlton, Maine, a descendant of the pre-Loyalist pioneers and a native of this province, was held by his associates in the service of the Bangor and Aroostook railway is indicated in the following despatch published in a Bangor newspaper.

"At a legally held meeting of the board of directors of Bangor and Aroostook Railway Company, a quorum being present, the following action was taken.

"The Board of Directors record with deep regret the death of Moses Burpee, consulting engineer of Bangor and Aroostook Railway Company, who served the company so efficiently and faithfully since its incorporation in 1891. As chief engineer he was in charge of construction of the railroad and by his ability and untiring efforts overcame the countless obstacles which were encountered in the pioneer days of railroading. He remained as chief engineer, in charge of all construction and maintenance, until 1928 when he retired from active service, continuing as consulting engineer, and throughout his long years of service he was devoted to his duties and to the welfare of the company; his experience and industry made him a most valued official. In private life he was highly esteemed by all who knew him and evinced a keen interest in civic affairs. The board of directors, officers and employees have suffered a real loss and will hold in memory his long and useful life."

A copy of the foregoing was ordered spread on the records of the board and another copy sent to Mr. Burpee's family.

The late Mr. Burpee was a brother of Tyler C. Burpee, of Fredericton, formerly a prominent official of the Intercolonial railway at Moncton, where for many years he was chief engineer of maintenance of way.

Behind Russia's Threat?

Attempts to minimize the effects of Russia's threatened bolt from the neutrality compact did not do so well during the week-end. Official Soviet newspapers—Pravda and Izvestia—have made it known, in interpreting official silence, that the position of the "Soviet Union is unchangeable and unshaken," and will not be satisfied with present efforts "to bury" the protest under long-drawn-out investigation and procedure.

But all the discussion and the Moscow newspapers fail to disclose the real reason behind the Soviet move. The most unlikely of countless guesses is that she actually wanted to clear the way for legal intervention on behalf of Madrid. As was pointed out some days ago, any such move could mean only instant action from Berlin and Rome, both in a much better geographical position to make their help count.

Britain's anger over the protest is entirely with the way it was delivered. Officials here resent such a reckless and hot-tempered approach to so delicate a situation at a time when calm and cool action is most needed. From this it can be concluded that the motive is more closely related to the method of approach than the actual threat. There have been any number of suggestions as to what this motive was, and such is Russian diplomacy that anyone or almost all of them may be partly if not entirely right.

Those who have long observed the Soviet technique will not overlook the fact that, like Germany, Russia uses foreign policy as a powerful instrument of domestic propaganda and influence. When it is possible she makes a splash outside to appear big and powerful at home. Therefore it is not unreasonable to read the threat as an answer to Hitler and fascism in general, and at the same time a bromide to the masses clamoring to lend aid to the "Spanish workers."

There may be other reasons equally plausible. Certainly Russia has a big stake in the trend of European affairs, and it is to her interest to keep herself before the other nations as an important partner in any step they might consider taking. To be sure, Moscow does not want to see Madrid fall to the rebels. She has invested heavily in Spanish communism, but she is not prepared to add any part of her army to that investment, or to have it involved in support of any other purpose she might have. Internal propaganda remains, therefore, as the primary reason for the threat, and from the tenor of the official Moscow press the most is being made of it.

SNAPSHOTS

We would like to ask one of our representatives at Ottawa, what the word "Faineant" means.

The President of St. Francis Xavier who is one of the brightest University Presidents in Eastern Canada, says that the world is "Bug House" and is away behind the times educationally. Well done, Prof., you are right. That's just what we say.

All papers make typographical errors at times. We have made some dammers in times past. We are going to keep away from them if we have to shoot somebody. Here are a few that are liable to turn an editor's hair gray:

The evening was spent in an infernal way, a radio programme being the main diversion.

The remains were taken to Fern Hill cemetery and laid to rest in the family plot.

You have to hand it to Professor Pugh when it comes to ordering a good square meal.

It is claimed semi-officially that nearly 5,000,000 touring cars entered Canada during the eighteen months ended June 30. No wonder the country has a highway traffic problem.

California veterinary authority declares solemnly that a cow cannot kick backward; only forward and sidewise. Perhaps. But there may be produced all kinds of barnyard testimony that a mischievous cow seems able to land on the milk pail from any angle.

The thrift of the Scot is made evident in many ways. Scientists throughout the world cabled messages to be read at ceremonies marking presentation recently of a bust of Lord Kelvin to the Smithsonian Institution at Washington. English scientists cabled 1,500 words. The Scots' message said, "Felicitations."

More Work

"Few people over-work. Plenty, however, over-eat, over-worry, over-drink and under-exercise, and plenty reach out for amusement and entertainment by listening and watching others. Few realize the real joy and happiness of conquest."

Dr. Nash pointed out to his listeners that by work he did not necessarily mean drudgery. The term work he declared, involved interest-driven activities which challenge the individual to succeed and especially to create.

"It takes a highly intellectual individual to enjoy leisure," he explained. "Most of us had better count on working. The individual who wakes up in the morning with a number of interesting things to do for the day is the person who will hold on to normality. As long as there is exhilaration in the task ahead, a man is young. The first time an individual wakes up in the morning and says: 'What is there of real interest for me to do today?' from that morning on, he is old."

Alberta Plans

it. Relatively speaking, Alberta has few industries, and it is the intention of the Government to loan credit without interest to men willing to manufacture goods now imported. Bonus schemes might be established for others—the whole plan designed to make Alberta more self-sustaining—a Province where a minimum of products sell for Canadian currency.

It may take months, perhaps years, to establish the Aberhart scheme of social credit in all its ramifications, but the long-range objective is to make the Province an economic unit as far as possible. Social Crediters believe their financial theories will work better with a higher volume of Alberta-made goods because the credit will circulate faster, reach more pockets, and leave people less dependent on interest-bearing money.

bacon and eggs or an omelette. More tea and an apple or two will serve the King for his midday meal. Then there is more tea about 4.30 each afternoon.

For dinner the King likes plain, "unsauces" foods, particularly steaks and grilled soles. When there are guests his Majesty generally orders a four-course dinner, served at 9 p.m.

On the menu are: melon, grapefruit or hors d'oeuvres, a meat course dessert and finally cheese. The King, like Queen Mary, does not care for soup, scarcely touches dessert, but is partial to new potatoes, new carrots and asparagus.
