Languages in Canada

There are so many languages spoken in Canada that if representative orators of each happened to be assembled on the Parliament Hill at one and the same time, the Peace Tower would be a veritable Tower of Babel. There are no fewer than thirty listed by the census and there are a good many others.

English is the prevailing language, of course, for that is the mother tongue of more than half of the population and a very large proportion of those whose mother tongue is another language have learned to speak English.

There are over 2,800,000 people who learned French in childhood. The Germans come third with over 360,000, then the Ukrainians with over a quarter of a million. The Poles are fifth with 118,000.

There are Chinese, Japanese, Dutch, Flemish, Greek, Italian, Spanish, Swedish, Norwegian, Danish, Icelandic, Gaelic, Austrian, Bohemian, Bulgarian, Russian, Slovak, Syrian, Arabic, Yiddish and many other languages spoken.

This information comes from census reports issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

Uncertainty in France

Sunday's balloting in the French general election has done nothing to indicate the shade of the new Government that will emerge from a second ballot to be taken on Sunday next. Only 179 of the 618 constituencies gave candidates a clear majority. Of these 92 counted among the parties of the Right, 72 among the Left Popular Front group, and the remainder as scattered and unpredictable Independents.

If any conclusions can be drawn from this first ballot, they are that France is certain of another four years of the uncertainty of coalition Cabinets, and that the Communists and more radical elements of the Socialist Parties have made the greatest gains. For the benefit of the voters, the choice at the next ballot will be between two groups, the Right or the Left. It is doubtful, however, that the amalgamations will do anything to simplify their understanding of the issues.

To begin with, the new power of the Communists will be a decided embarrassment to the Popular Front, which will need their support, but which will find it extremely difficult to include the Communists' demands in a composite platform. Further confusion will be had on both the major issues internal affairs and foreign policy. For the most part the Left is opposed to deflation, is unanimous with a demand for nationalization of the Bank of France, but is divided on the form and extent of its programme of "economic planning." Like the Right, it has in its elements that are unwavering in allegiance to the League of Nations and those who favor friendship with Italy.

The Right, while more mildly divided on the foreign issues, has supporters who are not altogether in favor of the generally adopted financial programme, which, in effect, is the programme of the late Laval Government. They also have to depend upon the support of those groups whom the Left accuses of being Fascist.

From such a conglomeration anything might come. Even if the Left or the Right should gain a clear majority over the other, it is generally accepted that they will be utterly incapable of retaining their amalgamated form, and it is not unlikely that France will again find herself governed by Cabinets concocted, not from either of the two wings, but from coalitions from the more conservative groups in the Left and the more radical parties of the Right.

Another Humorist Gone

Even if it is only an older generation that recalls "Mr. Dooley," the death of Peter Finley Dunne, his creator, makes interesting a reference to this genial philosopher and the quaint character he used for the expression of his views on public questions. Toward the end of last century Peter Finley Dunne was an outstanding figure on the Chicago press, having been city editor of the Times and editor-in-chief of the Evening Journal. He was a companion of George Ade, Eugene Field, and other well-known poets and humorists of that period.

Strangely enough, it was while thus busily engaged in the exacting work of daily journalism that Mr. Dunne caught public fancy with his conversations between Mr. Dooley and his friend Hinnissy. These became immensely popular, and during fifteen years were read wherever pointed but kindly humor was appreciated. Those who remember the inimitable Mr. Dooley will recall his customary opening sentence: "I see by th' paper, Hinnissy." Then followed Dooley's comments on whatever subject he chose for the day.

Through Peter Finley Dunne, Mr. Dooley became something of a nightmare to pompous politicians. He was master of a devastating brand of ridicule, and generally his thrusts were aimed at those in high places. There was much squirming in official circles as Mr. Dooley's satire-tipped tongue discussed with Hinnissy important matters of national policy or civic business. Some of his keenest shafts hit high figures in the Spanish-American war, and created, in turn, public amusement or apprehension.

About 1910 Mr. Dunne published the last of several books, entitled "Mr. Dooley Says," and in this Mr. Dooley said plenty. Then the author quietly dropped his work and his pet characters, and little was heard of him until the news of his death a few days ago. It is said he was about halfway through his "memoirs," and all who admired Peter Finley Dunne and his unique friend, Mr. Dooley, will regret that he was not given time to finish this work. Mr. Dunne knew a great deal about the people of the United States, and about human nature generally; and he also knew how to present this knowledge in delightful literary form.

Which chain store is it that made the young woman clerk work until midnight on Saturday night and then gave her the devil for being five minutes late on Monday morning? Is it the same chain store that had slave conditions prevailing about a year ago and later let up owing to public opinion? A writeup on conditions in certain of these slave driving establishments would prove interesting. Some of these birds get by with it because the girls are afraid of losing their jobs.

etc., clearer interpretation is given to the regulations which make it illegal for any proprietor or manager of an hotel, inn, restaurant or boarding-house to have game meat on his premises as well as prohibiting the sale, serving or advertising the same for sale as formerly, prohibited under the Act.

Authority is given for the continuation of the popular Special Non-Resident Deer License, at ten dollars, which was introduced by Order-in-Council last fall, it is to be noted that although this license was issued late last fall, it made an immediate appeal to non-resident hunters, 562 of these special licenses being sold, to help swell the total of non-resident hunters last season to 715—The largest number ever to visit New Brunswick since non-resident hunting licenses were established thirty-eight years ago. The Non-resident Bear Hunting License, for April, May and June, at a reduced price of five dollars, is likewise given official standing.

In order to encourage more resident hunters to make return of report cards showing game killed, the time for making such returns has been extended to the last of December.

Considerable attention has been given to regulations regarding the duties and responsibilities of licensed guides. In future, if a non-resident fisherman is accompanied by a person who is acting as a guide, it is necessary that such person must be a licensed guide. This will not preclude a non-resident from fishing by himself on waters in the province with which he is familiar or from taking his friends or relatives with him, provided they do not carry out the duties ordinarily done by licensed guides.

For some years it has been felt that some restrictions should be adopted, prohibiting the sale of trout. This was formerly controlled by Federal regulations under the Department of Fisheries, but due to a decision of the Privy Council it was ruled that such traffic must be controlled by the province. This has been given attention and by amendment to the Provincial Fisheries Act, the sale of trout is prohibited as well as the serving or advertising on menus or bills of fare by proprietor or manager of hotel, inn or restaurant. These regulations are in accord with those in effect in other provinces, including Ontario, Quebec and Nova Scotia.

In the report read by Mr. Dwyer he had recognized some of the statements; others he could not hear. He had not the slightest notion he was being interviewed by these two newspapermen and the reading of the report was "like a shot from ambush."

MOTOR VEHICLE OFFICES TO OPEN SATURDAY P. M.

Until such time as the rush for 1936 motor vehicle license plates and drivers' licenses has abated, the local office of the Motor Vehicle Branch on King Street, will remain open to the public on Saturday afternoons until 4:00 p.m., instead of 1:00 p.m., as formerly. Announcement of this step was made today by W. A. Barbour, Deputy Minister of Public Works.

These three extra hours on Saturdays will do much both to relieve the congestion of heavy clerical duties at the Motor Vehicle Branch and to accommodate those desirous of securing licenses. On Saturdays large numbers of farm people are in the city to attend the market and the fact that these people may secure their licenses until 4:00 o'clock in the afternoon should prove of advantage on both sides of the wicket.

Today, April 30th, is the last day on which 1935 licenses are valid in the Province of New Brunswick. The consequent rush of applicants wishing to secure new plates easily catalogs this date as one of the busiest on the calendar of the Motor Vehicle Branch.

STUCK ON THE ROAD

To the Daily Mail,
Fredericton, N. B.

On Saturday, April 24 a party of motorists started to go to Campbellton from St. Leonards through the Steward Highway, being informed the road was open. They found the road in fairly good condition until within about 25 miles of the end. When they ran into a five mile stretch of road covered by a foot and a half of snow and ice, after working their way along for a mile they got into it so deep they could not proceed any farther or turn back, even with the help of six men with shovels so were held up six hours until a horse could be procured to haul them through, the handiest being three miles distant, which we accomplished after much difficulty. When nearly through said stretch they were met by a car stranded, who had tried to get along from that end, but had to be shovelled out and turned about. It seemed the supervisor had been instructed to plough this section and clear the road but had not done so, hence the holdup of 100 miles of traffic for only a few hours work for a few men, where the writer was informed there were many men on duty, who would have been glad to work for it, done this job. This party in returning had to travel over 370 miles at an added expense, where a little over 100 would have taken them back. So much for N. B. roads.
