BRITISH STAND ON SANCTIONS

Examinations

The following editorial on examinations is taken from the Summerside Pioneer. The sentiments expressed in this editorial will find an echo amongst many people. As C. M. N. Steeves, M.A., a prominent graduate of U.N.B., said at a recent public function at that institution, "Examinations are a curse." Anyone who follows the present system of examinations as they are conducted in this province at the present time will agree with him. The following is the editorial, parents or teachers and trustees should study it:-

With the end of the school year in sight, and with children eagerly looking forward to the time-very soon now-when school will be over for a few weeks, The Pioneer wishes to raise its voice in protest against the brief period of acute misery with which the school year ends for every child-the "examination period."

Why it should be considered that ability to express one's self in words on paper, and to be able to recall details from a hetrogenous mass of facts flung at the pupil through the year-why these should be considered the sole basis on which a child may be promoted from one grade to another is just a little of a mystery to anyone who stops and thinks about it. To think, for example, that one's knowledge of history can actually be tested and graded by the answers to a half-dozen questions chosen at random from the work taken up during the year; that one's knowledge of mathematics can be tested and graded by a few trick questions placed before one to solve; or that one's knowledge of a foreign language can be tested and graded by translation of a few isolated passages—these are hangovers from the days of mediaeval schools when the only way known to teach a pupil anything was to have him memorize it from start to finish.

Besides being unfair as tests of knowledge, written examinations place children at an almost inestimable psychological handicap. To the child, a written examination is a sort of dreadful game, in which the teacher, setting the examination, tries to think up questions the pupils cannot answer, while the pupil tries to make sure that such a question cannot be asked. To the child, it becomes a human variant of the cat playing with the mouse.

Further, children differ widely in their ability to put facts on paper. They also differ widely in their ability to use the facts at their command. The ideal purpose of education, it would seem, is showing how to use facts at one's command, rather than how to write them down on paper. Yet the written examination entirely ignores a child's capabilities for use of facts, and considers solely his capabilities for use of words.

It is, however, of little use to condemn a system without offering something to take its place. Fortunately, it is not difficult to conceive of a grading system which could easily take the place of

Even with written examinations, the teacher who does the correcting is the final judge of the child's ability to pass from one grade to another. Surely he is an unintelligent teacher who needs a written examination to know whether a child has the knowledge and capability to pass from one stage of work to another in his school work. Surely the daily work of a child must tell a teacher whether or not a child is progressing rapidly enough. If a teacher does not keep sufficiently careful watch over his pupils to be a judge of these matters, he or she had better not be teaching; for his heart is not in his work.

This does not ask for a lowering of standards, or for the making of work easier for pupils. On the contrary, it asks for a raising of standards; for to maintain a high average of daily work through a school year requires continued application, continued use of the facts at one's command. Surely this is more desirable and of a higher standard than a sudden spurt at the end of the yeara spurt which the written examination system encourages.

The Moloch of the written examination has too long been the object of worship of our teachers and those in charge of our schools. Its ugly visage has terrified our children far too many years. It is like nothing in nature—like nothing at all in the world into which our children must move when they leave school. The destruction of it and its altars cannot come too soon.

RECIPROCITY BRINGS CANADA $17,000,000

Favorable Balance With U.S. Past Year of $58,297,247

OTTAWA, June 24-Five months of reciprocity with the United States have put an additional $17,000,000 into the pockets of Canadian producers, according to figures obtained recently from the Department of results of the Canadian-United States pact, which went into force on Jan. 1

Total Canadian exports of the commodities which benefited by the trade agreement were $80,544,237 for the five months January to May, inclusive, as against $63,980,103 in the like period of 1935. Returns showing Canadian purchases from the United States are not yet available for the five-month period ending with May of this year, but it is known that Canada has derived greater benefit from the trade agreement than has the United States thus far.

Favorable Balance

It is interesting to note, also, that Canada has a favorable balance of trade with the United States for the twelve months ending April, 1936, of $58,297,247, when account is taken of the gold which is shipped to New York from the mines of Northern Ontario and other Provinces which produce the precious metal.

Among the Canadian products which have been exported in increasing quantities to the United States since the new trade pact lowered the tariff bars are whiskey, cattle, horses, poultry, fish, cheese, lumber, wood, pulp, newsprint, farm imple ments and machinery, nickle and STRONG OBJE other minerals. Shipments of Canadian cattle to Shipments of Canadian cattle to the United States have nearly doubled since the agreement went into ing with May this year, Canada mar keted a total of 117.364 cattle across the border, as compared with only 60,001 in the like period last year. The trade agreement accorded this country a quota of 155,000 animals at the reduced tariff rate, and it looks as if the cattle producers will take full advantage of it.
