FOUR PROVINCES HAVE NATIONAL FLORAL EMBLEM

Violet is Suggested For New Brunswick by Legislation

Mother Canada and four of her provinces — Nova Scotia, Manitoba, Alberta and Ontario — have adopted native floral emblems. Canada's emblem, the Maple Leaf, like the Trillium of Nova Scotia was highly favored more than a century ago. The former, like the Rose of England, the Thistle of Scotland, the Shamrock of Ireland and many other national emblems became established without official enactment or public proclamation. The Trillium of Nova Scotia or Mayflower of Nova Scotia, the Anemone of Manitoba and the Wild Rose of Alberta have been made official by provincial legislation and a bill already prepared to give official standing to the Trillium of Ontario is expected to be enacted by the Ontario Legislature during the present sitting.

National flowers have in certain countries a peculiar significance or are symbolic of the characteristics or feelings of the nation. In many cases, as in the Canadian provinces and in the United States, the chosen flower has been adopted by legislation. In other cases as in several European countries, in Egypt, India and Japan it has by its association with poetry, religious ceremonies or popular sentiment of the people, gradually become universally recognized as the nation's symbol. In connection with each of these there is an interesting story.

The Canadian emblem more than a century ago was regarded as highly symbolical of the Canadian people. This was indicated at a banquet of the Saint Jean-Baptiste Society held in Montreal on June 24, 1836. The banquet hall was profusely decorated with branches and leaves of the Sugar Maple and the main speaker Denis Benjamin Viger spoke eloquently of the virtues of the Maple tree which was highly praised for its sturdiness in the forest, the substantial character of its wood for fuel and lumber and its great service to the pioneer in its annual harvest of syrup and sugar. The sentiments expressed by the speaker were undoubtedly popular in those early days of Canadian life.

The Trillium of Nova Scotia in 1901, was highly regarded as early as 1825 when the flower was presented in decoration that appeared on the front (Continued on Page Four)

Men are most annoying guys,
Always trying to be wise.
Bringing tin cans from the shop
Trying to hint the bride's a flop.

You're steering into trouble
If while trying to soothe Mabel
You knock her biscuit from the table.
There'll be a fight in your flat
If one falls and kills the cat.

TORCH BEARERS

An Easter Message

Thrilled by a vision and with soul afire
They live with purpose, flaming torch in hand,
Pointing the way to weary multitudes
Hopelessly longing for a promised land.

Fall of a dream of what life might be made:
Sublimely careless of man's praise or blame,
Their life is driven by the inner force
That unifies their efforts and their aim.

Amid the clash of selfishness and sin,
At times a most rare saintly soul appears,
Whose life and teaching shine the ages down
Like glowing star 'mid heaven's eternal spheres.

Upon their path, along the toilsome way
Where there is little gain and much of loss,
There looms, as portent of the price to pay,
The shadow of a sacrificial cross.

By those in power suspected, yet despised;
Whate'er there be of Truth in them, denied;
Exploited by the worldly cynical,
And oft-times mocked, and sometimes crucified.

Yet there is something in those ardent souls
Lives on, whatever else may fade or die,
Inspiring others to stretch out their hand
To bear a torch, and hold its flame on high.

Montreal. —W. J. King.

EASTER ODE

A world of sodden leaves and gaunt-limber trees,
They stand as in a dream. Set in the skies
The moon, like embers of a watch-fire, lies

Half-quenched by mists breathed up from restless seas;
And like a lion troubled in its sleep,
The wind, high-cradled in the piney hills

By fits and starts with fretful moaning thrills
The echoing air, and darkness rules the steep.

And yet I know the sun will soon have kist
With lip of fire the sky, so leaden-browed
Behind the silver gossamer of mist.

I know the Easter sun that gilds the cloud
Shall kiss God's robes where last it touched His shroud,
And all my soul is eloquent of Christ.
