SOCIAL HAPPENINGS

FREDERICTON GOLF CLUB, WHERE OPENING TEA IS BEING HELD TODAY

Opening Tea — Her Excellency the Lady Tweedsmuir, attended by Miss Spencer-Smith and Capt. P. J. S. Boyle, was present at a meeting of the Women's Institute at Athens, Ontario yesterday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. L. S. Morrison and family are spending the weekend at their summer home at Brown's Flats.

The opening of the Golf Club for the season takes place this afternoon. A mixed foursome will be played and refreshments will be served by the House Committee.

Motored to Capital — Mrs. Richard, wife of Hon. C. T. Richard, Provincial Secretary, motored to the city yesterday. Mrs. Richard was accompanied to the city by Miss Evangeline Melanson, R.N., of New York, who is visiting her parents in Bathurst, Sheriff and Mrs. H. A. Melanson. Miss Melanson, who is the guest of her aunt, Mrs. J. L. Neville and Mr. Neville, will return to Bathurst this evening with Hon. and Mrs. Richard.

Miss Helen Troy of Woodstock, is in the city enroute to Bathurst, where she will visit friends.

Miss Joy Clark of Woodstock is visiting friends in the city enroute to Dorchester.

Charles Brown of Bathurst, who motored to the city yesterday, returned home today.

Wife of Speaker Entertains — Carnations in soft pink tones and other mixed spring flowers were used effectively to adorn the rooms of the Speaker's chambers of the Senate, when Mrs. W. E. Foster, wife of the Speaker, entertained this week at a charmingly arranged tea. The hostess wore a handsome costume of navy blue, made on severely simple lines and a black hat. She was assisted in welcoming her guests by her daughter, Miss Charlotte Foster, who was in printed crepe. Tea was served from buffet tables, adorned with spring blossoms. About 150 guests were present.

Miss Muriel Wainwright was hostess at an enjoyable two table Bridge last evening at her home.

Miss Jocelyn Benoit, who has been a guest of Baroness D'Avray in Quebec City, has left for Nova Scotia, to join her parents, Brigadier and Mrs. P. S. Benoit at Yarmouth, N. S., where they have recently arrived from Boston in their yacht Plonia.

George R. Brannen has arrived home from Mount Allison Academy to spend his vacation with his parents Mr. and Mrs. Sterling Brannen.

Mrs. J. E. McCreedy, who has been visiting here with her parents, the Hon. W. E. Foster, Speaker of the Senate and Mrs. Foster in Ottawa, has left to return to her home in Rothesay, N. B.

Doaktown Wins Bessborough Shield — The announcement has been made that the provincial shield donated by Lady Bessborough for handicraft, to the Girl Guides, has been won by 1st Company Girl Guides, Doaktown. Stephen 2nd Company was awarded honourable mention. This year the Guides made a hooked rug. The article entered last year by the Guides was a quilt. The shield was donated as a parting gift by Lady Bessborough and is open to all Guides of the province. The judges were Miss Molly Barry, Miss Alma Weldon and Miss Clara LeBlanc.

FIDUCIARY SERVICES — Modern management of property in order to be efficient must be experienced and technically informed. Individuals, voluntary associations and corporations frequently need the assistance of such management.

This Company's principal business, for many years, has been the management of property in Trust for others. Our experience and technical knowledge are applied in the following fiduciary capacities: Administrator and Executor of Estates;

Trustee under Wills; Trustee under Living or Voluntary Trusts; Conservator, Guardian and Custodian of property; Trustee of Corporate Mortgages; Depositary for Reorganizations; Transfer Agent; Registrar of Securities; Agent in Disbursement of Dividends.

NEW BRUNSWICK, THE LAND OF MY FATHERS

I am a Maritimer, a New Brunswicker. As the years roll by—with accelerating speed, but not without accumulating compensations—I find myself growing more proud of this fact, and more deeply conscious of the part this land of my birth, my boyhood, and my early manhood days has played in the shaping of my destiny. With tenderest gratitude I acknowledge this shaping influence, but I would find it hard to analyze. One might as well pluck a rose to pieces to find the secret of its beauty. The lure of this sea-province dwells not in its dark headlands and tidal rivers, its lush valleys and spruce-black forests, its lonely lakes and high barrens, nor even in its little intimate towns and the stout-hearted folk who inhabit them; but rather in an essence brewed from all of these, whose scent and taste and colour quicken the hearts of us who wander—for we are a wandering kindred—until we dream dreams and see visions of this familiar spot or that, and interpret them, each of us, in terms of his own nostalgia.

To me the mere names—Tantramar, Westcock, Douglas, Fredericton, Madawaska, and a score more,—are enough to annihilate time and space and take me back to "The land where my memories abide." I stand again upon Beausejour, gazing out across the wavering green sea of the Tantramar marshes, the scent of timothy and clover tangled with salt of distant tides and sun-baked flats of tidal silt; I hear the crunch of snow beneath moccasins on mossy upland trails; I feel the shadboat buck the waves of Fundy under me, and cold spray on my cheek; I am jogging behind old Jerry and wondering if Father will be in time for his afternoon service at Dorchester Church; I hear the grit of a shod canoe pole thrusting against the rapids of the Tobique and Nepisiguit or swinging the bow into the races of the Meductic; I hear the wind keening with loneliness through the chimneys of gray barns on Savage Island; I am strolling down elm-clouded streets toward the big brick Rectory and the lilac-scented garden behind. Yes, all these awaken at such names, and countless smaller, more homely things, such as the savour of frying buckwheat cakes, the flute-like piping of frogs on the dewy edge of twilight, the squeak of rats in the basement pantry, the smell of tansy at the turn of the road.

So in my day-dreams, as in my night dreams, I hear again familiar voices, see familiar faces, haunt familiar places, as though the years had never been; and I could not forget them if I would. Other lands and other loves may fascinate, but my first love alone endures, bone of my bone, spirit of my spirit.

Some day I shall return to the Land of my Fathers, and the far-flung places of the earth shall know me no more.

—Sir Charles G. D. Roberts.
